FEEDBACK LETTERS & COMMENTS

INTERESTING, BUT NO

SEEK A CONVERSATION

Dear Editor,

I found the article in your June 2 issue "Snuffed Out" [News] concerning law enforcement efforts in South Texas' Rio Grande Valley very interesting reading. Of course I on the other hand and unlike the thrust of the article, fully support all of Texas' efforts to interdict and stem the tide of illegals crossing and committing criminal activities along the border.

Dear Editor.

Kudos to Louis Black for discovering – if in a meandering and tepid fashion – the central role played by free speech in the maintenance of a democratic civil society ["Page Two: Unfortunately the Left Is Guilty of Hypocrisy Even If the Right Is More Openly Oppressive," June 2].

The current chaos felt by most of us since last Nov. 8 has more than a few of our fellow country folk shouting down constitutionally protected "hate speech" and swinging bike locks at "fascists."

If Mr. Black and the rest of us can successfully rehabilitate the notion of moral absolutes: Who knows? LETTERS TO THE EDITOR must be signed with full name and include daytime phone number, full address, or email address. Letters should be no longer than 300 words.

We reserve the right to edit all submissions. Letters may not be edited, added to, or changed by sender once we receive them.

Maybe we can even start having a little gratitude for this opportunity to engage in earnest conversations about our collective future.

Put this paper down now, and go seek out a conversation with a friend that could not be more different than you politically. Stick a sock in your "feelings" and really listen to her/him. See if you can learn something.

I dare you.

A robust commitment to the self-evident morality of free-expression – if a bitter pill for some – offers our best chance of arriving at a more just and equitable America.

When any of us begins to equate speech that we do not like, with "violence"; we slip down a slope where it is too easy to swing bike locks at another in defense of a utopia only we can see. Tom Friedley

CHOCK-FULL O' RACISM

Dear Editor,

Hey! How much are you guys paying to print that shit "News of the Weird" in the Chronicle every issue? I know it seems like a little harmless levity, but have you ever actually looked at it? The damn thing is chock-full o' racism and bullshit libertarian dogma – in the most recent issue, it makes a bunch of snide remarks about Yale grad students trying to organize a union, smugly sniffing at their desire for more benefits "above and beyond the free tuition" they receive. And this isn't the first time this stupid column has done something like this! PLUS, it isn't even funny! How about y'all get someone else, maybe local, to write up something along these same lines, but free of the free-marketeering, libertarian, racist viewpoint the "News of the Weird" wants to push. Hell, I'll do it for half of whatever y'all are paying that shitheel! Eric Williams

AN UNRELATED NOTE ...

Dear Editor,

I enjoyed Tim Stegall's article on Spoon ["Sign o' the Times," Music, June 2].

However, I would like to clarify a completely unrelated comment relating to Beck's 1994 SXSW show.

There was in fact quite a line for Beck's show at Emo's. My friend and I tried to get in, but due to fire code regulations (i.e., the place was packed due to Johnny Cash) they weren't letting anyone in unless someone left. And nobody was leaving during Johnny Cash, so not only was there a line, but it wasn't moving an inch.

We tried the back alley entrance but were told the same thing.

Determined to get in (and only 17 at the time) we scoped out the abandoned property adjacent to Emo's (to the east) which allowed us to peer over the wall and leap into Emo's while the staff wasn't looking. By saving the entry fee us poor high schoolers were able to purchase Beck shirts, and I still have mine today.

QUOTE of the WEEK

"As you leave Austin and ... cross the Travis County line, it starts smelling different. And you know what that fragrance is? Freedom. It's the smell of freedom that does not exist in Austin, Texas." - Gov. Greg Abbott, expressing his judgment of the city in which he lives, and its residents, whom he governs

EADLINES

CITY COUNCIL COUNTDOWN With three regular meetings until the July hiatus, City Council meets today, June 8, with an eye on the clock, the budget, and CodeNEXT (subject of work sessions each Tue.-Wed. this month; see p.16). Among the subjects today are park use, the search for a city manager, and the usual set of zoning cases. See Council: "Park It Here," p.12.

COUNCIL ALSO PLANS to vote on submitting a proposal for a grant from the New York-based nonprofit Vera Institute of Justice to provide legal representation to immigrants in deportation proceedings. If awarded, the city will use the funds to match the existing grant agreement with Catholic Charities of Central Texas.

COUNTY'S LEGAL CHALLENGE? On June 6. Travis County Commissioners voted unanimously to allow the county attorney to take action, including potentially a legal challenge, against anti-immigrant Senate Bill 4. Austin joined San Antonio in filing suit against Texas over SB 4 last week. See "Austin Joins Lawsuit ...," p.12.

SXSW IN EXILE? U.S. Sens. Bob Menendez (D-New Jersey) and Catherine Masto (D-Nevada) urged South by Southwest to pull out of Texas on Wednesday, so long as SB 4 is law. SXSW Managing Director Roland Swenson said he agrees that the law "stands diametrically opposed to the spirit of SXSW," but brushed off the senators' request. "Austin is our home and an integral part of who we are."

ANOTHER NEW HOSPITAL Houston-based Texas Children's Hospital will expand into Austin over the next five years, with four pediatric urgentcare clinics, 18 pediatric primary-care practices, and two maternal-fetal medicine practices. An urgentcare clinic will open in South Austin next spring.

10.000 NEW JOBS Last week, Mayor Steve Adler and Travis County Judge Sarah Eckhardt rolled out their Austin Metro Area Master Community Workforce Plan, hoping to train 10,000 lowincome workers for "middle-skill" jobs by 2021.

SUMMER BREAK'S OVER Gov. Greg Abbott announced plans for a special session, to begin July 18 and cover an eye-popping 20 items. See "A Very Special Session," p.14.

IT CAN WAIT Abbott signed House Bill 62, banning texting while driving, statewide, though he also said he now wants legislation pre-empting any local regulation of mobile phone use while driving.

MOTION FOR RE-REHEARING Travis Co. District Attorney Margaret Moore "remains firmly committed" to earning a rehearing for the Charles Kleinert case in the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, said a statement issued last week. She's "considering all available options," including the possibility of taking the case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Austin Energy caught flak last week from the Travis Audubon Society, which accused AE of "heartless" methods in removing monk parakeet colony nests from utility poles. AE responded that some nests present fire hazards and danger to workers, when the lines receive monthly maintenance. "Crews take extreme care to ensure that their actions do not cause a fire or electrical interruption or personal injury," said AE COO Elaina Ball in a statement, while welcoming "best practice" advice from the Audubon Society. The Audubon folks say they're on the case - M.K.

What's That Smell?

MICHAEL KING

OUR AUSTIN-BASHING GOVERNOR KNOWS HOW TO SPREAD MANURE

Consider our Gov. Greg Abbott: duly elected to represent the entire state of Texas, not just the suburban, white Republicans with whom he obviously feels most comfortable. Letting his hair down this week for the Bell County GOP, the governor rebranded the city he's called home for decades the "People's Republic of Austin" (can't these duffers even come up with some new jokes?), and then he got personal. "As you leave Austin and start heading north, you start feeling different. Once you cross the Travis County line, it starts smelling different. And you know what that they can't wait to join the federal lobby line. fragrance is? Freedom. It's the smell of freedom that does not exist in Austin, Texas."

Abbott is nervous that his hard-right thunder has been stolen by Lt. Gov. Dan

"Shameless Panderer" Patrick, and along with Patrick nipping at his heels there's the presidential gleam that sparks in every Texas governor's eye. Since Donald Trump has confirmed that there is literally no political poison that GOP voters won't swallow, it must be difficult for Abbott to find some ideological ground to stand on. Shortly after "joking" that reporters should be wary of his proficiency with guns, he decided Austin and Travis County present even handier targets - like those Republicans who hate D.C. so much

There was also his reflexive crack that

Austin wants to "California-ize" Texas (as if waves of Western immigrants hadn't already spiked our housing prices) - that was while signing a bill to let California-based Uber impose its own corporate priorities on local residents. We could call this hypocrisy, but it's so transparent it hardly merits the epithet.

Shameful Litany

All this was preamble to Abbott's rollout of his special legislative session agenda, an excuse to spend another month (and plenty of public money) campaigning to front-load next year's Republican primaries. The 20 items on the governor's to-do list range from the innocuous - virtually administrative approval of agencies that would otherwise sunset - to headline-grabbing, like the absurd GOP obsession with bathroom purification (reduced in Abbott's agenda litany to a single word: "privacy").

Patrick and the Senate sabotaged the sunset legislation in order to force the special session, but as the Texas Tribune's Ross CONTINUED ON P.10

LEGE SPECIAL SESSION | STAND AGAINST ISLAMOPHOBES PHOTOS | AUSTINCHRONICLE.COM/NEWS

Brought to you by the TEXAS WEDDING IF D @ @ 0

Ramsey notes, "If you rank the potential special-session subjects in order of their likely success, Patrick's top issue – the bathroom bill – sits solidly in last place ... [and] anybody hoping to pass other bills will be hacking through a thicket."

That's not to say there isn't plenty here to cause alarm to rational Texans, and to confirm the reaction of Mayor Steve Adler that Abbott's shotgun agenda amounts to a "war on cities." Beginning with a cosmetic public school "teacher pay increase" (supposedly to be accomplished without new funding), there will be another run at making it easier to fire those same teachers. "School choice" (i.e., private school vouchers, opposed even by rural Republicans) is in the mix, as are "property tax reform" and "caps on spending" (more attempts to punish local jurisdictions for the state's refusal to fund public schools).

If that were not enough, a half-dozen items on the list would make it harder for cities and counties to protect the environment (and even trees), to annex suburban free-riders, even to regulate traffic hazards that burden local police. (Signing a bill that will finally ban texting-whiledriving statewide, Abbott said the Lege should now prohibit any other local regulation of vehicular phone use – thus likely making it impossible to enforce the texting ban.)

Inevitably, there are a handful of items to further restrict health care access and reproductive rights for women – always in the name of defending "life." The GOP fetus-fetish would be laughable if didn't directly impact so many vulnerable women and their families.

Killing Mothers

Abbott apparently retains some ability to be embarrassed; the final item of his agenda would extend the existence of the Maternal Mortality and Morbidity Task Force, an effort to determine why the Texas rate of maternal mortality has become the highest in the developed world. The spike in maternal deaths actually predates the most recent legislative assaults on reproductive rights that closed Planned Parenthood clinics across the state, severely limiting access to basic health care, especially in rural areas.

As Katha Pollitt reported in The Nation, we don't know all the causes of the fatalities but, "We do know that most of them died because they were low-income women who lacked good medical care. A lot of them were on Medicaid – and in Texas, that means extreme poverty: Texas is one of 19 states that have refused to expand Medicaid under the Affordable Care Act."

During Abbott's cynical special session, don't expect to hear much about this 20thranked priority in the governor's wish list. It will feature much more waving of the bloody shirt over "privacy" and property taxes. What's that smell coming from the governor's mansion? It's pure-dee Texas horseshit.

NAKED CITY

AISD's Billion Dollar Bond

Austin Independent School District trustees on Monday mulled over a proposal to place a $1.5 billion bond proposition on the November ballot – by far the biggest request for construction dollars the district has ever made. Plans include investments toward 41 items, including five new schools, and major upgrades at existing campuses to deal with overcrowding and safety issues. Trustees must make a final decision on whether to move forward with the bond election by August in order to get it on the November ballot.

Approval of the measure would set up the district's first bond election since 2013, when voters only approved two of four propositions. Chief Financial Officer Nicole Conley told board members that the district could issue up to $1 billion in bonds without raising the current property tax rate, but any more would trigger a tax hike in 2023. That may spark some tough prioritization choices, and make the already controversial plan to move the Liberal Arts and Science Academy from LBJ High to its own purpose-built campus even more of a talking point.

Even if the board does present the full package to voters in November, it would still only be a fraction of what's needed. AISD faces an estimated $3 billion in deferred maintenance costs – a combination of overdue repairs, delayed essential infrastructure investments, and overcrowding relief. And that doesn't include the additional $1.6 billion in new investments recommended over the next 25 years in the latest iteration of the Facility Master Plan, as adopted in April, for a total of $4.6 billion. – Richard Whittaker

Watts Succeeds Stribling

Negotiations continue for the city's public safety labor groups in the wake of Labor Relations Officer Tom Stribling's unexpected death last week. On Tuesday, interim City Manager Elaine Hart announced that Larry Watts – the city's first LRO – will assume the responsibility of running negotiations for the city. (Assistant Director Sylvia Flores will run everything else within that office, and presided over Tuesday's meeting with the Austin-Travis County EMS Employee Association.) Watts served as LRO from 2009-11, and was credited by Hart as being "largely responsible for building the office into what it is today." He also spent time as both chief of staff and director of Labor Relations at Combined Law Enforcement Associations of Texas, the state's largest police union, where he helped negotiate more than 100 labor contracts. Watts' first meeting as the city's LRO takes place today, June 8, with the Austin Police Association – 9am-5pm in Building 1 of the city's Northeast campus, 1521 Rutherford. – Chase Hoffberger

Lewis vs. Med School

Austin lawyer Fred Lewis has resumed his war of words with UT-Austin's Dell Medical School, accusing the school of withholding public information. UT's attorneys have requested an opinion from the state attorney general on whether they can withhold certain documents that Lewis has requested, in his ongoing campaign to determine whether the Medical School is legally spending annual funding it receives from Central Health Care District property taxes. In a press release, Lewis accuses the Medical School of refusing to release "any part of its strategic plans for health care for the poor," because those plans may be "proprietary."

"It is quite difficult to understand how UT's strategic future plans for the poor's health care are proprietary," Lewis continues, and concludes: "Does it intend to profit off the poor? If so, it should share the profits with Central Health, benefiting the poor and taxpayers." Lewis and an allied group, Help Ensure Accountable Leadership and Transparency in Health, have repeatedly accused the Med School of misappropriating Central Health funds for purposes other than direct health care for the poor.

Dell Medical School spokesman Stephen Scheibal responded to Lewis' latest accusations in a statement: "The Dell Medical School released 41 documents, including 28 strategic planning documents, in response to Mr. Lewis' open records request. ... UT-Austin is seeking guidance from the attorney general on whether to release an additional six documents to ensure that we are complying with Texas public information laws and the exemptions they specify.

"The six documents include details about specific processes and plans that could improve health in Travis County and Central Texas. We don't want to compromise the potential benefits we might offer this community by sharing information that may not be public and from which others might seek to profit. We want to ensure that we are complying with the law, and we will follow the guidance we receive from the Texas attorney general." – Michael King

Austin Parks: We're No. 46!

The Trust for Public Land (www.tpl.org) has released its annual "ParkScore" index, and reports that Austin ranks 46th among the 100 largest U.S. cities in ratings for park access, size, and facilities and investment. According to the Trust's release, Austin's park system "earned strong scores for park acceage and dog parks, but was hurt by below-average marks for park access." Austin did move up one spot – from last year's 47th place – but the change does not reflect "substantive improvements to the local park system." Minneapolis and St. Paul ranked No. 1 and No. 2 in Minneapolis and St. Paul ranked No. 1 and No. 2 in the index, and among Texas cities only Plano (17th) ranked higher. Austin's median park size is 8.5 acres (the national average is 5.0); Austin maintains 1.4 dog parks per 100,000 residents (national average is 0.9). But only 54% of Austin residents live within a 10-minute walk of a park – the national average is 66%.

Austin Parks Foundation CEO Colin Wallis called the city's ranking disappointing. "What it says is that compared to the cities that take great care of their parks, Austin is lagging way behind. We simply don't invest the resources to have quality parks for all of our residents. For a city whose residents cherish parks and open spaces, this is unfortunate. I hope our city leadership will take this very seriously as the annual budget process unfolds." – M.K.

Council: Park It Here

SLOUCHING TOWARD A SUMMER BREAK

With only three regular meetings left before their annual July break, City Council members may be feeling beleaguered this month, since they're simultaneously trying to keep an eye on budget issues while CodeNEXT comes barreling down the pike. At 62 Items, today's June 8 meeting doesn't look terribly burdensome, but judging only from previous discussions and Tuesday's work session, they'll find plenty of things to furrow their brows over. (On the CodeNEXT front, Council received another update Tuesday morning, mainly on timelines and the revision process – there remains uneasiness about whether the public will have sufficient time to get up to speed and ask questions before the next draft; officially, the process moves forward with reassurances about "flexibility.")

A bit surprisingly, parks issues took quite a bit of attention Tuesday, primarily over proposed amendments to the ordinances governing major park use for special events. The Parkland Events Task Force is making recommendations to tighten up problems like illegal parking - e.g., it's gotten cheaper to just pay for an illegal parking ticket than to pay to park legally elsewhere - and also to define more precisely the number of days that parks can used for big events like Austin City Limits, the Trail of Lights, or the Kite Festival (under very different standards and circumstances, one of the headaches the Task Force tried to address). Council members wondered if they need yet more information (for example, about near-neighborhood parking proposals still in the works) before they can make a decision on the ordinance. They may want to chew that over or postpone.

There was less initial reaction to a brief update from the City Manager Search Advisory Task Force, informing Council of its proposed work plan (Item 11). Appointed to develop a "profile" of a prospective city manager to succeed Marc Ott (the interim post is held by Elaine Hart), Task Force members described their public outreach plan: online input, city organizational contacts, public meetings (the first is scheduled for Monday, June 12, 10am-noon), as well as district meetings scheduled via Council offices.

The Task Force intends to make a recommendation to Council by mid-July, but there is at least some public sentiment that its charge should also include eventual meetings with prospective candidates. We may hear about that issue today.

Other matters under discussion:

• Remember the Artists: Council seems a bit disappointed with limits and range of the Economic Development Department's Art Space Assistance Program – to help small arts groups pay the rent – but nobody offered a magic wand to generate more funding.

• In the Zones: Of a dozen zoning cases, none jump out as threatening significant agitation, but that's always a roll of the dice.

• Not Just Yet: The final matter of the day (Item 62) is the proposal to change the Commission voting standard for a Historic Landmark designation (over the objection of the landowner) from two-thirds to a simple majority. Potentially a vexed question, but today, staff will be requesting a postponement to August, to allow input from the Planning Commission.

It's Pecan Street Festival Day, Band Aid School of Music Day, the Parks Foundation's 25th Anniversary, and the Chronicle's own Aesthetic Eminence Robert Faires will be accepting a proclamation in honor of Austin Art Critics Day. The musical honore is David Messier – presumably, at least this moment won't break his heart. – Michael King

Austin Joins Lawsuit Over SB 4

As promised, the city of Austin has begun its legal battle against the constitutionality of anti-immigrant Senate Bill 4, signed by Gov. Greg Abbott in May. On June 1, the city of San Antonio – represented by Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund – and the Workers Defense Project filed suit against Texas over SB 4. Austin intervened in that case the following day. The two cities become the second and third to wage battle against the state. The tiny border town of El Cenizo, with El Paso County, filed suit in May.

SB 4, set to take effect Sept. 1, would force local police to comply with voluntary U.S. Immigrations and Customs Enforcement (ICE) detainer requests, and allow law enforcement to inquire about the citizenship status of residents arrested or detained. It would also remove public officials who endorse policies contrary to SB 4's provisions. Meant to punish so-called "sanctuary cities," it's widely regarded as racist legislation that will divide families, instill fear in immigrant communities, and drain local resources.

"Make no mistake about it, Governor Greg Abbott picked a fight with Texas families when he signed SB 4," said Jose Garza of the Workers Defense Project, during a June 1 press call. "And it's a fight he's not going to win." See "Austin Wages Legal Battle Against SB 4 in Court," June 2, for more coverage. – Mary Tuma

Campaign 2018: Can Anyone Beat Lamar Smith?

Ready or not, Campaign 2018 has begun. An early local kickoff occurred Saturday evening, June 3, at the Scoot Inn, where seven Democratic candidates trumpeted their determination to "Replace Lamar Smith," the 31-year GOP incumbent in U.S. House District 21 – one of Austin's five heavily gerrymandered congressional districts, linking West and Southwest Austin with a wide swath of the Hill Country and part of San Antonio. The race is already garnering national attention because of Smith's role as chair of the House Science, Space, and Technology Committee while also being an aggressive denier of climate science.

The seven candidates onstage Saturday were united in their opposition to Smith, and indeed on most issues likely to receive Democratic support in next year's elections. The likeliest question for the nearly 200 people in attendance was how to draw qualifying distinctions among the candidates. Adam Reiser of host organization Race to Replace (www. replacelamar.com) moderated the forum, doing his best to spread the questions and the issues among seven candidates – who are not all of those considering a Dem primary run.

Democratic candidates to replace U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith gather for a campaign kickoff Saturday (June 3) at the Scoot Inn. Candidates are seated in the order that they're discussed in the corresponding story.

Some brief notes on the candidates: • Derrick Crowe (www.electcrowe.com), the communications director for SAFE, has experience as a congressional aide (for Nancy Pelosi, among others), and cited experience in "fighting the GOP" and in defending Social Security and Medicare. He described a smalltown background near Amarillo, and near a refinery "polluting our air and providing campaign funding for Smith." Crowe said he is running to promote an "economy that works for everyone" and a government that "supports science."

• Joseph Kopser (www.josephkopser.com), founder and president of Grayline (tech consultants), earlier established the RideScout transportation app, and continues to work as a tech entrepreneur. He emphasized this experience as well as his 20 years as an Army Ranger. He said his campaign will "avoid ideological extremes": "It's in the middle that we can find the progress to move our country forward."

• Elliott McFadden (www.mcfaddenfortx21. com), the director of Austin B-Cycle, is also a former chair of the Travis County Democratic Party, and described himself as a "transit and housing activist." He recalled his grandfather, a small-town doctor, providing medicines at cost and being among the first to treat infections with penicillin, and connected it to his own experience in helping establish the Travis County Healthcare District (now Central Health). "This president – and this congressman – is attacking science and the truth," he said, "and is threatening us in the work that we do."

Chris Perri (www.chrisperrifortexas.com), an attorney who directs the pro bono UT-Law Expunction Project, said his vocation as a criminal defense attorney began when an innocent man from his hometown was executed. He recalled a "Star Trek" principle – "the first duty is to the truth" – noting that incumbent Smith "denies the truth of climate change and is more interested in promoting a corporate agenda than representing his district."
Rixi Melton (www.rixiforcongress.com), a working mother and small-business consultant, said people are "exhausted by the burdens of an unbalanced economy" and emphasized

RIDESHARE WARS ROUND 2: FARE THEE WELL

It's been 10 days, as of June 8, since Uber and Lyft returned to Austin, and quite quickly the two apps have reasserted their dominance in the local ridesharing economy. Already one transportation network company (TNC) that entered the market upon the two behemoths' May 2016 departures has called it quits. Just before 1am on Tuesday, Fare announced that its time in Austin would end, effective immediately.

"Thank you for opening your beautiful city to us these last 12 months," read an email sent to riders and customers by the Arizonabased company. "We cannot fully express how much we appreciate you choosing Fare and all your support. Sadly, the time has come to say goodbye. Unfortunately, we are unable to endure the recent loss of business."

Fare isn't the only app that lost a significant amount of business since Gov. Greg Abbott's signing of House Bill 100 ushered in the next era of the city's Rideshare Wars. RideAustin COO Marisa Goldenberg told the Chronicle that the nonprofit's business was down 55% in its first full week of the two TNCs' return. She attributed at least part of that drop to the natural downturn of riders that occurs when UT students leave for the summer. "But certainly Uber and Lyft had a big impact, especially given their generous discounts offered and brand awareness among tourists." Goldenberg said the company has heard positive feedback from drivers and passengers who appreciate their model. She anticipates industry demand will "naturally segment into different rideshare companies based on what is most important to them."

Meanwhile, Fasten announced a rate change last week. CEO Kirill Evdakov emphasized that the company is hoping to keep its pricing competitive "but not at [the] drivers' expense." During peak times, the company will still take a $.99 cut, rather than bump that up, leaving more of the profit for drivers. Fasten hopes it will appeal to consumers who want cheaper or comparable fares but also care about drivers making a living. It has, to date, retained a healthy portion of its drivers, he said, saving it money in training and on certifying new options. In the last year, the company has cultivated a dedicated Austin following. Evdakov hopes to keep those drivers even in the face of attractive incentives to switch to Uber and Lyft. "They understand how much better [Fasten is] for the city and for the drivers," he said. – Nina Hernandez her support for universal health care. "If we can treat corporations like people," she said, "we can treat people like people."

• Scott Sturm (www.sturmforcongress.com), a paramedic since 2003, said he entered the race because "the polarized country tearing itself apart is making me sick inside." His primary focus is on medicine and improving the health care system, telling skeptical friends he's running because "I'm a U.S. citizen, and I believe in this country ... and I'm willing to fight for people's rights."

• Mary Wilson (www.electmarywilson.com) describes herself as a "mathematician and a minister," and recalled her upbringing in farm country, that she believes will give her insight to D21 residents. She began by noting that the U.S. has the highest maternal death rate among developed countries, and that Texas is 51st – below the District of Columbia – in the U.S. "I think we can do better," she said.

That's quite a litany, and it doesn't include emergency physician Ryan Allen, who's also contemplating a run. San Antonio-based labor and health care activist Tom Wakely, who challenged Smith as a Democrat in 2016, has also declared, though as a "post-partisan" who says he might run as an independent. (And among the audience Saturday evening was top-hatted "Crazy Carl" Hickerson, passing out fliers that declared himself a candidate supporting, among other things, exporting hemp, single payer health care, and "annexing every country that has an American military base.") Moreover, D21 may well be redrawn by the courts later this year – meaning the candidates aren't yet certain who their voters are (or indeed if they themselves will be living in the district) – although the primary is likely to be decided by Dems in the Travis County end of the district.

There were frankly no dramatic issue distinctions made on Saturday, although Crowe and McFadden have the most relevant political experience, and Kopser appears to be looking for a middle-ground to run in a district drawn for Republicans: e.g., he was the only candidate to defend hydrocarbon fracking if done with "transparency and oversight." (On gun control, Kopser had the best one-liner: "If you really want automatic weapons and big magazines, you should do what I did and join the Army.") Of the others, Melton and Perri seemed most prepared, but all the candidates declared their support for equality, health care, scientific understanding, and "getting money out of politics." But whoever wins the Dem primary, hoping to beat Smith, the Koch brothers, and their deep-pocketed allies, will need plenty of money.

Vincent Harding's Hill DEM PARTY CHAIR DOESN'T WANT TO TALK ABOUT EMBATTLED STATE REP. DAWNNA DUKES

Precinct chairs in state Rep. Dawnna Dukes' district are asking the embattled Pflugerville Democrat to live up to her word and resign from the Texas House immediately. Those same chairs now find themselves in a very public fight with Travis County Democratic Party Chair Vincent Harding about whether to let that process play out.

Disagreements arose at the May 31 meeting of the Travis County Democratic Party County Executive Committee, when Precinct 126 Chair Daniel Segura-Kelly proposed adding a resolution to the agenda that would thank Dukes for her service and request that she resign. Backed by the majority of the District 46 precinct chairs, the resolution cited Dukes' own September 2016 statement indicating that, due to injuries sustained in a 2013 car wreck, she "can no longer provide the active, effective leadership that is needed to continue my sworn duties." Dukes had originally said she would step down on Jan. 10 but decided, without informing her fellow lawmakers or the long list of potential replacement candidates, that she would stay, even though by this point she faced a slate of state charges alleging abuse of office. By pushing the non-binding resolution, Segura-Kelly said that he and the other precinct chairs were simply taking Dukes at her original word:

Precinct chairs in state Rep. Dawnna "She went into the session and essentially ukes' district are asking the embattled proved to us that she is not up for the job."

The numbers don't lie: Aside from missing most of the session's days spent on the House floor, Dukes also skipped 10 of the 14 Appropriations hearings, and 10 of 13 hearings for the subcommittee on Article II of the budget. She made one of eight meetings for the House Committee on International Trade & Intergovernmental Affairs: on May 4, when Chair Rafael Anchia, D-Dallas, convened for two full minutes. Dukes was similarly ineffectual passing legislation. She failed to pass any bills at all, and only two of the 23 bills she filed even made it out of committee; neither managed a second reading on the floor. For context, fellow Travis County Dem Donna Howard saw 13 bills she either authored or joint-authored pass. Celia Israel had 10. Eddie Rodriguez had two. Even Rep. Gina Hinojosa, in her first session, managed to pass three bills.

Segura-Kelly said that the precinct chairs had given Dukes the duration of the session to prove she could do the job. He added that they were not swayed by the outstanding criminal charges, saying that asking for her to resign before she had her day in court would be "inappropriate. But her attendance record this session has been abysmal."

Problem was, Harding refused to hear the resolution.

The chair issued a statement on June 2 clarifying what he felt had happened, and why he took such a position. On May 21, he wrote, he had received a written request from Segura-Kelly to add the resolution to the May 31 CEC agenda. But Harding denied the request, noting that it did not include any resolution text. At the May 31 meeting, and lacking a parliamentarian to give alternate counsel, he cited precedent that precinct chairs cannot overrule the party chair on the inclusion (or lack thereof) of any agenda item. Furthermore, he accused the precinct chairs of springing the resolution on members.

Segura-Kelly has accused Harding of mischaracterizing the process. First, he said, the resolution could only be introduced at the May 31 CEC, and would only be eligible for a vote at the June meeting, which would allow plenty of time for discussion. Second, Segura-Kelly said he raised the issue with Harding on April 30 "and he

A Very Special Session

It seems that Gov. Greg Abbott took a recent New York Times article painting him as ineffectual to heart. After prevaricating for a week over whether he would call a special session, on Tuesday, June 6, he not only announced that he was calling lawmakers back on July 18, but that he was putting a remarkable 20 issues on the call for when they get back to Austin.

The inescapable issue is passing legislation, known as a sunset bill, to extend the life of the Texas Medical Board. If such legislation is not passed by Sept. 1, then the agency (which licenses and regulates doctors) will begin a one-year wind-up process. Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick knew that when he and his allies sabotaged the actual sunset bill in the regular session, making a special session nearly inevitable. (Revisit "Lege Lines: Patrick's Hostage Play," June 2.)

What Patrick wanted was to force the Legislature to come back so that he could push through a hard-line version of the infamous and discriminatory bathroom bill, plus school vouchers and property tax restrictions for cities and counties. Abbott has seemingly pledged to go much further: During his official announcement, to the increasing bafflement of staff and the gathered press corps, he explained that passage of the sunset bill out of the Senate will trigger the addition of a conservative wish list of 19 additional items. The lineup includes a grab bag of measures that restrict local control, further undermine worker protections, set impossible school finance goals, regulate health care providers, or often a combination of all of the above:

- Increase teacher pay by $1,000 without additional state or local school funding
- Easier hiring and firing for school administrators
- Establish a school finance reform commission
- Vouchers for special needs students
- Cut the ability of local governments to raise funds
- Cap state and local government spending at population growth plus inflation
- Overturn the Austin Heritage Tree Ordinance
- Prevent changes to permit rules to affect an ongoing construction project
- Require faster permit approval
- Limit municipal annexation powers

- Revise the recently passed texting-while-driving bill to preempt local regulations
- The discriminatory bathroom bill
- Ban paycheck deductions for union dues
- · Ban local funding for groups that provide abortions
- Ban insurance coverage for abortions
- Tougher reporting requirements for abortions
- Further barriers to enacting a "do not resuscitate" order
- Harsher penalties for mail-in ballot fraud
- Extending the life of the Maternal Mortality Task Force Yet there are very real questions about whether Abbott is ret there are very real questions about whether Abbott is actually serious about these measures – questions that remain unanswered, as he refused to speak to the press after rattling off his wish list. For example, the bathroom bill is euphemistically listed in his official statement as "privacy," and at the press conference Abbott said he would be happy with the House version of the bill, which only covered schools ("Texas Legislators Push Through Two Anti-LGBTQ Bills Sunday Night," May 22). Moreover, he did not say that he would call the Legislature back for additional special sessions if any of these measures failed to pass. Instead, he simply said: "If they fail, it's not for lack of time. It will be because of lack of will."

Abbott's agenda has already drawn criticism. Travis County Judge Sarah Eckhardt called it "another round of political game-playing at the Capitol," while even fiscal conservatives like Texas Association of Business President Chris Wallace condemned any inclusion of a bathroom bill. Most significant may be the guarded response from Speaker Joe Straus, who spent much of the regular session refusing to fold to Patrick's strong-arm tactics. He simply said: "The House looks forward to resuming our work on school finance and other challenges facing this state." – Richard Whittaker told me on that call, 'I will never allow it; it's not going to happen.'" Moreover, he said it was Harding who told him that the resolution could only be added to the agenda if the chairs attended the meeting in person – which is what they did.

Dukes' precinct chairs are not the only Democratic activists dissatisfied enough to start discussing recorded policy stances. Segura-Kelly said he had caught word of similar initiatives from other Travis County precinct chairs outside of Dukes' district, as well as leadership from Liberal Austin Democrats and Austin Tejano Democrats. Dukes still has her supporters, who have taken to social media to defend her, and the backing of politically cautious groups like the Capital Tejano Democrats.

Harding seemed to further exacerbate the situation on May 31 when he told the Statesman: "I do not think it would be wise for the Democratic Party to ask an elected African-American official to resign." That comment came in a broader context – that calling for Dukes' exit could be seen by her supporters as holding her to a different standard. Harding noted that no similar resolution had been broached when former Travis County District Attorney Rosemary Lehmberg, a white woman, was convicted of DWI in 2013 – to which Segura-Kelly reminded: "Rosemary had her legal issues, but she kept showing up for the job. If Representative Dukes had been showing up for her job, we wouldn't be having this conversation."

Even before the recent charges, Dukes' durability as an incumbent was a source of befuddlement to many observers. Long seen as being too cozy with the state's Republican leadership, she has somehow avoided primary challenges since 2008. Behind the scenes, some Democratic activists have blamed party leadership for actively discouraging candidates from challenging her – for fear of risking losing her influential Appropriations seat, and sparking an ugly internal civil war.

Dukes has been silent on the issue, and did not respond to a request to go on the record with the Chronicle. Segura-Kelly said he has not heard from her - which places him on par with the Travis County Democratic delegation, who barely exchanged a word in public or private with Dukes all session. Even Harding declined to clarify whether he had talked with Dukes, telling the Chronicle it would be inappropriate for him to discuss private conversations with lawmakers.

Segura-Kelly said that he has reached out to Dukes' office in hopes that the precinct chairs can discuss their concerns in person. At the same time, he plans to bring the unheard resolution back for a future CEC meeting. He said, "We're just asking for the Travis County Democratic Party to do what's right." – Richard Whittaker

Who Is Mick Mulvaney ... and Why Is He So Awful?

In the contest for "Most Awful Member of Donald Trump's Cabinet," you'd assume that Jeff Sessions, the bigoted twerp now serving as attorney general, would be a shoo-in. Suddenly, however, Mick Mulvaney has darted from out of the deepest, meanest darkness of severe right-wing dogma to become the new favorite for awfulest of them all.

Mulvaney, a former Tea Party Congress critter from South Carolina, was plucked from obscurity to become Trump's budget director – and chief demonizer of America's poor people. The budget he wrote for The Donald savages such effective anti-poverty programs as food stamps, Medicaid, and job training, in order to pay for massive, unneeded, and unproductive tax cuts for America's pampered 1-percenters.

But that's not the only reason they want to clobber the poor, for Mulvaney sees himself as the wrathful enforcer of the Holy Work Ethic, a Dickensian character whose job it is to punish the poor for being, in his view, a morally bankrupt class of slothful moochers. The Trump budget is all about "compassion," he declaims – explaining that it shows compassion for the poor by compelling them to get a job in order to end their so-called "shame" of accepting public assistance, rather than "taking charge of their own lives." Never mind that most able-bodied adults getting poverty aid already work or are looking for a job – Mulvaney mindlessly barks, "We need people to go to work."

No, Mick, we need you to go get a clue about the harsh realities of living in poverty – including having to endure constant condescension from judgmental jerks like you who smugly condemn a food-stamp family while drawing a six-figure salary from taxpayers, plus health coverage, a rich pension, and a chauffeured limousine.

Congratulations, you're the awfulest of the awful.

Why Does Everyone Hate CodeNEXT?

And can a polarized Austin reach consensus on land use?

BY MICHAEL KING

If CodeNEXT were a Broadway musical (just imagine the pitch meeting), it would have closed in previews. The massive, years-long attempt to revise and update Austin's complex land development code of ordinances - tentatively scheduled for City Council approval next spring – was getting bad reviews even before the first draft was released, and the drumbeat hasn't stopped since the (partial) draft text was followed by the draft maps. Last Wednesday, Council itself spent a couple of hours grilling the consultants - for not releasing enough information, and for releasing too much bad information. Like many of their constituents, council members had been flummoxed by posted draft spreadsheets (a planning estimation tool) that seemed to indicate aggressive redevelopment and dramatic residential "displacement" threatened by the new code. They were only partly reassured when told that the (since updated) draft spreadsheets had been mislabeled, misleading, and misunderstood. (Although it's considered heresy in Austin, there is such a thing as too much transparency.)

Keep that word "draft" in mind – or more accurately, draft of a draft of a ... – but the barely born CodeNEXT has already assumed the blame for all of Austin's ongoing growth pains: unaffordability, inequality, congestion ... essentially every negative aspect of highspeed urban change. At the edges, the criticisms sound contradictory: 1) CodeNEXT will accelerate growth and encourage the destruction of traditional single-family neighborhoods via intensive redevelopment; 2) CodeNEXT will prevent the necessary redevelopment of exclusively single-family neighborhoods for the housing supply needed to accommodate Austin's growing population. Mayor Steve Adler himself declared some weeks ago, "The maps will be wrong" – and the usual kibitzers have been only too happy to agree with him. Right now, for most Austinites, CodeNEXT is more rumor than news. Nevertheless, people closest to the process – who are either actively engaged in the work or else following it professionally – say that they remain (very cautiously) optimistic, and are trying to withhold judgment while the initial skeleton is fleshed out over the next few months.

HALF-BAKED

The barely born

CodeNEXT has already assumed the blame for all of

Austin's ongoing

growing pains.

Nuria Zaragoza is a longtime neighborhood advocate and city volunteer, and currently both a Planning Commissioner and a member of the Land Development Code Advisory Group working regularly on CodeNEXT. Asked for her perspective, she responded that the "work seems so massive right now it's hard to see what to say." The preparatory work preceding this draft has been lengthy, she said, but "there was very little discussion on specific direction before the draft code came out. We've truly been at this only a couple of months in earnest."

The existing land development code is already intimidating in scale, Zaragoza said, so it's not surprising that the "information dump" of the new draft would appear overwhelming. She expects that the initial revision timeline – with deadlines for public input this week and July 7, before the next draft – will have to be pushed back, yet she's not ready to form a judgment on maintaining the one-year timeline for Council approval. The most important task currently, she says, is to "get the information out to the public in a way that's accessible."

In the CodeNEXT draft map, the city is split between transect zones (pink, about 30%), non-transect zones (blue, 45%), and existing "legacy" zoning (yellow, 24%).

A LAND USE LEXICON

Hybrid Land Development Code: The proposed CodeNEXT is a combination of transect (form-based) and non-transect (use-based) zones. Together they provide different degrees and methods of control. In addition, much of the city is slated to remain under the existing use-based code.

Use-Based Code (Non-Transect Zones): The most familiar type of zoning, also known as Euclidean (for Euclid, Ohio), separates and controls land use primarily by usage: residential (single or multi-family), commercial, industrial, and so on. Austin's current code is use-based, as is the section of new code in CodeNEXT known as non-transect zones, which cover about 45% of the total area in the city.

Form-Based Code (Transect Zones): This approach regulates primarily the scale and shape of buildings instead of their uses. It's the basis of the CodeNEXT transect zones. Under this format, different zones will be determined by density (T3 is a neighborhood similar to SF-3, while T6 is reserved for the densest urban core). In the current plan, most of this type of form-based zoning is found in central neighborhoods (East Austin, near north, and in the 78704 ZIP code). It makes up about 30% of the city.

Legacy Code (Chapter 25): At present, roughly 24% of the city is set to remain under the current code – largely a mix of transit oriented districts, planned unit developments, neighborhood combining & conservation districts (NCCDs), Mueller, and other highly negotiated small area plans that drafters deemed too complex to take apart. The LDC is city law, often referred to as Chapter 25, its place in Austin's Code of Ordinances. ADUs: Accessory dwelling units are secondary residences on one residential lot, often accessed through an alley. Currently, ADUs are not allowed in SF-2 zoning, which includes the majority of West Austin. CodeNEXT would allow ADUs to be built throughout the city, except in rural (RR) and very low density residential (VLDR) zoning.

Upzoning: Increases the amount of building(s) that can be built in a given area. CodeNEXT planners have often been asked if the new plan will upzone properties along corridors and city centers for additional entitlements. The project's official goal calls for "right-size" zoning entitlements.

Downzoning: Reduces the amount of building that can be done in a specific area.

PUDs: A planned unit development is a complex development planned as a single project with its own zoning laws that are expected to be "superior" to conventional regulations.

Conditional Overlays: Used on specific properties in combination with zoning districts to "further restrict" land use. COs are often applied to reduce building heights and impervious cover limits, as in a watershed, and to restrict permitted uses allowed in a zoning district. Staff reports that they apply to about 12,000 parcels citywide.

of West Austin, essentially untouched?

"The code we have now does not do what we want it to do." That was Mayor Steve Adler at a recent CodeNEXT meeting. He's having to remind people how bad the current code is with some frequency, because as bad as it is, people really hate the draft release of CodeNEXT - and while that's often the sign of a good compromise, there's ample reason to believe in this case that it's largely the sign of a bad product. There are enough areas where all sides agree, and enough good points about the new transect, or formbased codes, to suggest that this process could actually yield a very good result. But it's in need of a lot more work, and desperately in need of top-level policy direction.

It's been pointed out that cities don't usually jump from a generalized, aspirational plan like our Imagine Austin Comprehensive Plan, to a code rewrite, without an intermediate step of a detailed, and up-to-date, planning document. The last Council left a lot of questions unanswered, and policy disagreements unsettled, when it last visited Imagine Austin. Mayor Adler's 10-1 Council has in fact never considered Imagine Austin. It's time for them to do so, and to make some serious policy decisions, before the planners go any further down the rabbit hole. CM Alison Alter put it bluntly at Tuesday's work session: "There's no point in the boards and commissions spending any more time on the current draft."

But the question isn't whether to slow down, but how to move ahead. Most fundamentally: Do we want to continue with the three-part code (see map and key at left) that virtually everyone has slammed as overly complicated and hard to use, and that has no exit strategy? If so, Council needs to declare that and shut down the conversation; if not, they need to declare that, and start a new conversation.

But that's just one thing. While we're at it, here are a few other questions that require policy direction from the Council:

· Do we want to encourage further density in Imagine Austin corridors and centers, where Mobility Bond money is already headed?

MAKING POLICY BY DEFAULT

CodeNEXT planners have said they haven't made policy changes, but that's not true: Not all properties are simply translated into the most similar zoning in the new code. And guite a lot of regulations have changed. As MPT Kathie Tovo pointed out Tuesday, "there are increased unit counts in every zone; parking requirements, compatibility, McMansion rules, lots of other things ... There is no one [outside of perhaps some NCCDs] who will be left unchanged. ... People need detailed factual info about what those changes are." A few of the more notable ones: • T3 zones allow more units than the current SF zones they replace in most of the central city: at least three units per lot, and up to six, depending on the lot size.

• The non-transect LDR zoning allows accessory dwelling units, unlike the SF-2 it replaces in much of West Austin.

- Parking requirements are slashed across the board.
- Compatibility standards are replaced and in many places weakened.
- Even properties slated to stay under the existing "Chapter 25" code may be subject to new procedures and rules.
- Quite a lot of tracts are proposed to be upzoned, and others downzoned, with no apparent logic.

 Rules, regulations, and policies are changed for everyone. And as Citizens Advisory Group Chair Jim Duncan put it at a recent meeting, "Too much authority is given to staff by CodeNEXT. Deviations, exceptions, and waivers from our codes should be granted only after a thorough and transparent public vetting, and not behind closed doors by staff and entitlement attorneys." - N.B.

"It's very difficult to see the forest for the trees right now," Zaragoza said. "But the timing argument is less important than the substance. It's much more important to get it right than to get it fast."

Zaragoza reiterated a common early complaint – that inner-city neighborhoods will be asked to carry more than their fair share of the changes imposed by growth, while outer neighborhoods – especially far Westside neighborhoods with expanses of single-family subdivisions – will escape much of the disruption. A similar point was made indirectly by Mark Rogers, executive director of the Guadalupe Neighborhood Development Corporation, which builds affordable housing for working-class families in East Austin. utterly inadequate to Austin's needs for much greater housing supply. "The CodeNEXT maps ... are so deeply flawed," said AURA's Josiah Stevenson, "that further tinkering block by block around the edges of a few neighborhoods and corridors will not be enough to enable CodeNEXT to meaningfully address Austin's worsening affordability, mobility, environmental, and segregation problems." Similarly, Niran Babalola of Desegregate ATX wrote, "The draft CodeNEXT maps are a shameful commitment to the status quo that has created an Austin for the wealthy."

GENTLE DENSITY

So there are plenty of early misgivings, but the consistent undertone to the responses from those in the middle of the process

Equating density with affordability "hasn't worked Downtown, nor in Brooklyn, another common example."

MARK ROGERS, GUADALUPE NEIGHBORHOOD DEVELOPMENT CORP.

"CodeNEXT is an attempt to make the land-use code reflect what Imagine Austin [the city's comprehensive plan, formally adopted in 2012] said to do," Rogers said. But "the draft doesn't reflect the 'corridors and nodes' approach of adding housing; instead, it's got these 'neighborhood transect zones' that have kind of a cookie-cutter approach. The trouble is, we don't have cookie-cutter parcels of land."

Nevertheless, Rogers says he's "trying to be optimistic" about the revision process and the planners' intentions to accommodate public feedback, noting in particular that the proposals concerning affordable housing and density bonuses have not even been released. Right now, he said, "The cake is half-baked and not tasting good. When we begin to see revisions with public input ... I think they'll make changes to make us closer to where we want to be."

Other early judgments have been much harsher. The land-use activists at AURA quickly denounced the draft and maps as is: watching and waiting. Mandy De Mayo of HousingWorks noted the absence of the density bonuses at this time, and said simply, "Thus far, I have way more questions than answers." She said it's far too soon for a "major analysis," and noted as well the polarized opinions that predated the first drafts. "Some people are suggesting that enormous 'upzoning' [for more intensive uses] is going to ruin our city," De Mayo said, "while others say that the intent is to downzone everything and make it harder to increase density. It's difficult to believe that both opinions can be correct."

De Mayo does say she has general concerns about the potential implications for low-income communities "especially in Central East Austin, if it all gets developed." She said the drafts seem to suggest an attempt at encouraging "gentle density" via accessory dwelling units, but that "the setback requirements for building them make them infeasible in much of Central Austin." Moreover, she said, there appears to be little provision for similar density west of MoPac: moving from "SF-2" (large lot residential) to "LDR" (low density residential) does appear to allow ADUs, but otherwise looks like little more than a change in nomenclature that consequently raises fair housing issues.

As for the practicality of the timeline, De Mayo said, it will depend entirely on "an enormous level of public input ... beyond 'what are the implications for my property and my neighborhood?"" She worries that the currently diametrically opposed opinions will make it impossible for staff to take that input and "come up with a draft that makes sense for the whole city." But, she added, slowing down presents its own risks: "If we give ourselves five years, we would just fill up that time with more arguments."

Mark Rogers, whose business mission is to provide family housing for people who would otherwise be pushed out of East Austin, says it's a mistake to equate density with affordability – "that hasn't worked Downtown, nor in Brooklyn, another common example" – and that people need to begin thinking more about "more bedrooms" rather than just "more units."

"That's the 'missing middle' that everyone's advocating, and the people opposing it are less worried about 'density' itself than about losing the character of their neighborhoods," Rogers said. "There are ways to achieve density without doing that – to preserve neighborhood character while still increasing the number of units. That's what the revisions have to attempt."

Another member of the CAG, Dave Sullivan, noted that it's still very early in the process, and that despite all the early worries on all sides, "I still feel optimistic, and positive." In response to fears of "ruinous" effects expressed in his Westside neighborhood newsletter, he wrote a piece emphasizing the many layers of review in the works – official and unofficial, individuals and groups, professional staff and elected City Council – and said, "I believe we can arrive at something better than we have now.

"I think we can do it; it depends on the

Permitting Pains

HOW WILL THE NEW CODE AFFECT THE WAY YOU RENOVATE YOUR HOUSE?

by Richard Whittaker

The complex draft zoning maps drawn up as part of the city of Austin's CodeNEXT project most likely seem conceptual. They only become reality when homeowners and developers start pulling permits.

Casey Giles, the regulatory committee chair for the Greater Austin Contractors & Engineers Association, describes permitting policy as breaking down into two worlds. First, the horizontal – the experience most homeowners go through: pulling a permit for a remodel, getting inspections for their property, and closing those permits out. There's also the vertical, which more often impacts developers. Giles describes that piece as: "You can build something 'this big' here, 'this big' here."

The horizontal has not yet been CodeNEXT's focus. Energy thus far has been expended on the vertical, as expressed in the maps being circulated and studied ad nauseam. While many people have been left baffled by the minutiae, Giles is optimistic that the details could make life easier for developers; clear and defined maps will give them a quicker guide to the viability of individual projects. "It's so prescriptive with sizes and shapes," he said, "and it does away with random tents and articulations and some of the more complex set-back issues – that it should help."

The basic permitting approval process will remain untouched. But Giles sees a few potential pitfalls, particularly with regard to the handling of detention ponds, runoff, and beneficial uses of storm- and waste-water for purposes such as irrigation. "That's going to be very difficult to design," he said, "which means it's going to be harder to permit, because anything that is harder to design is harder to permit." What he doesn't expect to change is what he called "the culture at One Texas Center" – the home of the city's Development Services Department, 505 Barton Springs Rd. Austin's permitting process is notoriously more stringent than any surrounding municipality ("I've had 20-30 pages of comments, when in other cities I've had three or four," said Giles), and the department has faced years of understaffing and inspectors with high workloads, which CodeNEXT does not broach.

There's a bigger concern for permitting in Austin, that has nothing to do with CodeNEXT. On June 6, Gov. Greg Abbott announced his call for a legislative special session, due to start July 18. Among red meat conservative items such as the bathroom bill and abortion restrictions were a trifecta of developer-friendly proposals. Abbott wants a ban on changing rules midway through a construction project; strict time limits on processing permit applications; and, in a shot aimed directly at the city of Austin, an end to the Heritage Tree Ordinance. political will, or whether people will instead want to throw away all the work that's been done." He added that the effect on affordability will not rely solely on CodeNEXT, but on all the tools available to the city: Council policy, land banks, ADUs, microunits, and more. He cited the similar arguments preceding the successful 2016 mobility bond, and quoted a friend's summation: "It's going to pass; some people will be unhappy; it'll be better than what we have now; and we're going to make mistakes."

DIFFICULT CONVERSATIONS

Jeff Jack, president of the Zilker Neighborhood Association, says he's worried that the missteps actually began earlier: "There are still questions that should have been answered during the Imagine Austin process. There hasn't been enough concern about affordability for existing residents, nor has there been enough consideration of unintended consequences." On the latter point, he said that reading the current draft he could already anticipate a major spike in cases for the Board of Adjustment - where he's served hard time – and that with all the enthusiasm for increased density, "there's been little consideration given to the effect it would have on infrastructure like roads and waterlines, and the potential costs."

Like De Mayo, Jack worries that the outcome will be to put "all the density in the urban-core neighborhoods," and avoid the hard political task of making outer neighborhoods share the burden. The process, he says, "doesn't have any empathy for the central city and homeowners, and threatens to turn over our planning efforts to the market." Does he think the process is salvageable? "It will take a lot of time, and political courage."

Former City Council Member Chris Riley was around for the Imagine Austin plan, and he's got a personal and professional interest in the CodeNEXT outcome. (He's consulting on the process for the Austin Board of Realtors, "so I can devote the time and effort without it being completely volunteer.") Like many of the advocates, he remains optimistic. "I concur with the general sentiment that it's pretty messy at this point," he said, "but it's on us, as the whole community, to weigh in for improvements." He emphasized that this is a job the city committed itself to when it rewrote Austin's comprehensive plan, and committed the city to a more "compact and connected" community. Riley can itemize his own disappointments with the draft text and maps. "Why do we have so much legacy zoning, even in the corridors? Do we really need three zoning systems [legacy, transect, nontransect] side by side? Why is it so hard to achieve the housing options that so many people have been hoping to see in virtually all the zones - the 'missing middle' and other housing types in any of the proposed districts?"

Despite those criticisms, Riley insists, "I

CODENEXT CALENDAR

City Council is tentatively scheduled to approve CodeNEXT in the spring of 2018. Yesterday, June 7, was the deadline for public comment, feedback, and recommendations on the draft code text. Here's the toplevel plan for the next 12 months - though there's a lot of skepticism about this timeline (see stories).

- JULY 7, 2017: Deadline for public comment, feedback, and recommendations on the draft mapping to be incorporated into the second draft map, though the commenting tools will remain active
- JULY 14, 2017: Deadline for comments on yet-unseen affordability incentives, now expected June 16
- SEPT. 2017: Public hearings on the second draft of the map and code begin before both the Planning Commission and Zoning and Platting Commission
- NOV. 2017: City Council receives recommendations from both commissions
- DEC. 2017: Council considers draft, and input from public comment
- APRIL 2018: Council completes public hearing process and adopts – or not
- POST-ADOPTION PERIOD: 90-180 days for criteria manual updates before new code goes into effect

¿No Habla Land Use?

ONE THING ABOUT CodeNEXT: IT'S DEFINITELY IN ENGLISH by Joseph Caterine

One to one-thousand-one-hundred-thirty. That's the ratio of Spanish scripted pages to English scripted pages held within the mass of CodeNEXT documents that are accessible today by the public. In a February op-ed in the Statesman. Mayor Steve Adler wrote of the current land use code: "It's a mess, but we can fix it if we work together." But the current code is only available in English.

When the deadline for public comment on the proposed code's first draft passed Wednesday, June 7, all Spanish speakers had to consult was a single page on the city's website titled "CodeNEXT en Español." The page offers visitors a one-and-a-half minute introductory video and a link to a one-page overview of what will go on through the rewrite process. Notably missing is a link to the CodeNEXT online public comment portal, where citizens are invited to peruse an interactive version of the draft code text and post notes on specific passages - as well as view other residents' thoughts - in English. (The page does include a link to the interactive CodeNEXT comparison map, which does provide space for comments, though that page too is not available in Spanish.) With the city's Hispanic population already representing more than 35% of all residents - and on pace to become the majority demographic by 2020 - any monolingual call for collaboration among all Austinites may be unrealistic. That concern first arose in public forum during the joint meeting of land use commissioners in January, when Zoning and Platting Commissioner Ann Denkler asked staff about the availability of draft translations. "We don't have the resources," CodeNEXT spokesperson Alina Carnahan said in response. "Some of it's a budget issue. Some of it's a time issue. We're doing as much as we can with the resources we have."

Speaking Monday with the

i Código Siduiente! "want[s] to hear feedback from the Spanish speaking community. All of our office hours are available in Spanish if [someone] requests them. Additionally, we have Spanish speaking staff" at all CodeNEXT open houses. But interpreters are not always available at other CodeNEXT-related talks, like commission meetings. At the May 17 meeting of the Environmental Commission, for example, a Spanish speaking resident from Dove Springs came to share her opinion during public comment, but had to rely on a fellow attendee who volunteered to translate in order to properly convey her point.

EC Chair Marisa Perales remarked during that meeting that more needed to be done to accommodate Hispanic participation during the review process. "It seems like community engagement efforts regarding CodeNEXT are not robust enough to include those voices," she said. "We need to be prioritizing these voices and these concerns." Part of the letter of recommendation the commission adopted that night was a proposal that City Council make Spanish interpretation more integral to CodeNEXT discourse and to put more energy into reaching the Hispanic communities throughout the city.

Ana Aguirre, another Zoning and Platting commissioner, suggested that the lack of accessibility is a product of city inequity. "Everyone should have an equal opportunity to be informed." she said. "If they don't have that opportunity to be aware of what's going on, then they cannot be engaged in the process."

Mayoral spokesperson Jason Stanford told the Chronicle: "We always can do better, but I think the city's doing a pretty good job as far as including Spanish speakers in this process." The city will host a Spanish-language open house to discuss CodeNEXT on Wednesday, June 28, from 7-8:30pm at the Carver Museum and Cultural Center, but it may take more than a 90-minute event to reduce the disparity in political efficacy between English speaking residents and everyone else in terms of contributing to the final CodeNEXT document.

A CODENEXT QUESTIONNAIRE

What is CodeNEXT?

CodeNEXT is the city's effort to rewrite Austin's land development code (LDC), begun in 2013, which dictates "what, where, and how much can be built" within city limits. The code operates as city law. CodeNEXT - a hybrid LDC - is intended to enact Imagine Austin, the city's comprehensive plan documenting long-term goals like connectability, affordability, and vibrancy, as well as steps toward achieving the desired outcome.

This sounds complicated. Why did the city decide to get rid of Austin's existing land development code?

It is complicated, just like the existing code – which was originally written in the Eighties, when the city's population was about half of what it is today. The code has been amended "hundreds of times" over the past 30 years, according to the spring 2017 Code Draft Preview. A code diagnosis report, released in May 2014, called the current LDC "virtually unusable," due to competing regulations and a lack of clarity and structure. Ideally, CodeNEXT will simplify the code and better address affordable housing, mobility, and dwindling natural resources.

Affordable housing does seem like something Austin should address. How will CodeNEXT do that?

As the consultants have repeatedly warned, the code itself cannot produce deeply affordable housing, given Austin's market pressures and land prices. The new "missing middle" housing types (cottages, ADUs, tiny houses) could provide smaller, somewhat less expensive > choices for middle-income residents, though the current maps restrict most of these options to central and central-east ZIP codes. The revamped affordability incentives have yet to be released (the newest date target is June 16), but are unlikely to add more than a few units per project if the past is any guide - while many fear the new code may accelerate teardowns of existing "market affordable" (read: older) housing stock that's the last refuge for the low-wage workers who keep our city going. While the code may help us nibble around the edges, we'll need to look elsewhere for solutions to Austin's growing affordability crisis.

So will the rewrite affect my house?

That depends. At the most basic level, no, zoning changes will not require you to update your home (though even now, if you pull a city permit you may be required to bring certain aspects of your property up to code). Under the current draft, the greatest change will be in the older central and central-east neighborhoods, where a combination of proposed rezonings and on-site parking reductions have many longtime residents feeling skittish. For now, huge sections of West Austin remain relatively untouched, and roughly 24% of the city is expected to remain under the current code (see "A Land Use Lexicon: Legacy Code." p.16). Impacts on property taxes are still a big unknown, though generally speaking, the more you and your neighbors build, the higher your appraisal will be. The CodeNEXT website attempts to answer questions for homeowners, but the real-life impact remains unclear.

This sounds like a slog. Has the CodeNEXT team had any trouble retaining leadership?

Well, yes. From last June through this March, three CodeNEXT leaders resigned from their positions, beginning with the project's executive lead Matt Lewis, who prior to stepping down spent two months on administrative leave as city HR investigated harassment allegations made against him. Project Manager Jim Robertson departed one month later; he accepted a position with the city of Boulder. Most recently, in March, Paul DiGiuseppe, the project's outreach manager responsible for educating the public and stakeholders about the rewrite, took a job in Rhode Island. More than a dozen city departments are working on the project (not to mention the 18-member Code Advisory Group), plus paid consultants working for the Berkeley-based Opticos Design, which has kept code conversations (relatively) on schedule.

And haven't delays been an ongoing issue with CodeNEXT?

It's true. Delays have been somewhat of a constant through the rewrite process - including this week, as the Code Advisory Group (CAG), the Zoning and Platting Commission (ZAP), the Planning Commission (PC), and the American Institute of Architects (AIA) Austin were all expected to release reports and additional recommendations by June 7. before the deadline for comments to be incorporated into the second draft of the code, but reports slowly trickled in. ZAP was the only group to meet the deadline - their report was submitted to Council on May 30 and requested the CodeNEXT process be slowed down. AIA released a four-page report of "high-level key findings," early Wed., June 7. The architects' initial findings include inconsistent map-

don't view CodeNEXT as a plot on anybody's part. It's an effort to align our land-use code with our new comprehensive plan, and it's an enormous and difficult undertaking. There's a very long way to go before our final adoption, and it's a long-planned process we need to go through as a community."

Regarding the given schedule for all this work, Riley echoed De Mayo's prediction that delaying the inevitable only means "pushing the difficult conversations and decisions down the road."

"It's going to be hard and painful no matter what," he said. "I'm taking the deadlines seriously, and expecting that we will operate on that timetable. ... The conversations are going to be sensitive in any case; people are very anxious about affordability and displacement. That it will take difficult conversations is not a surprise." He acknowledges that if we are to "get it right ... there is a lot more work to do to get the changes in the right places. What you always hope for is a calm and reasonable civic discussion about the code, and one that we all can engage in.

"There's no avoiding it, as a community," he concluded. "We need everybody at the table. It's time to sit down and keep working at the task that we know is before us."

Despite all the fears and worries now dominating the public conversations about CodeNEXT, most of the folks working or following the process continue to share Riley's hope that we'll end up with a land development code, in Sullivan's words, "better than we have now." But where we're standing at the moment, it's difficult to see the end of the road.

ping, overly strict transect regulations, a still "missing middle," and a need to further reduce parking space requirements. Recommendations are offered, but the AIA's full report now won't be released until July 1. Alina Carnahan, head of CodeNEXT's media relations team, confirmed CAG was behind. During their June 4 meeting, CAG covered half of their issue brief, but still have another half to go before putting together their report, which is now expected to be released on June 30. Stephen Oliver, who chairs the Planning Commission, told the Chronicle they too needed more time to supply valuable feedback. Like AIA. Oliver expects PC to release key findings after either their Tue., June 13 or June 27 meetings. The Board of Adjustment also announced Wednesday that their CodeNEXT comments would not be ready and released until the end of the month. Staff indicated at the most recent Council meeting that "there might be a way we could incorporate their comments."

Okay, so who's in charge now?

CodeNEXT is run by the city's Planning and Zoning Department, and its director Greg Guernsey serves as executive project lead. Jorge Rousselin has taken on the role of project manager; he's one of two code development leads, along with Jennifer Todd. Lead consultants from Opticos include Congratulations Austin 10 years of Water Conservation Success

Drop by drop Austinites reduced water use by Over 35% since 2006

Ten years ago Austin dramatically strengthened its water conservation code and Austinites took the mission of water conservation to heart. Even as the population has grown by nearly 200,000 people, Austin's total water use has declined. Since 2006, per person water usage of 190 gallons per day is down to 122 gallons per day. Thank you Austin for your hard work and dedication to saving water now and for future generations. Let's keep it going this summer.

The inexplicable ease with which foreign hackers attack U.S. computers and security systems is finally grabbing the attention of officials. In a March Washington Post report, a technology expert from Britain's King's College London told a reporter of his astonishment to realize that the "security chips" on congressional staff members' identification badges are fake: The badge "doesn't actually have a proper chip," he said. "It has a picture of a chip." Apparently, he added, "It's [there] only to prevent chip envy."

Troubling Airwaves

A country & western radio station in Benson, Ariz. (near Tucson), owned by Paul Lotsof, has periodically run "public service announcements" about one of Lotsof's pet peeves: the harsh sentences usually given to mere "collectors" of child pornography. Many, he believes, are nondangerous, daydreaming hermits - but often imprisoned for long stretches. Thus, his PSAs publicize tips for avoiding the police, such as saving child porn only on an external computer drive (and hiding the drive securely). Despite recent community outrage (causing Lotsof to retire the announcements), he remains defiant that, since he personally avoids child porn, he is merely exercising a free-speech right.

Can't Possibly Be True

Suzette Welton has been in prison in Alaska for 17 years based almost solely on nowdebunked forensic evidence, but the state's lack of a clemency process means she cannot challenge her life sentence unless she proves "complete" innocence. Evidence that the fire that killed her son was "arson" was based not on science but on widely believed (but wrong) folklore on how intentional fires burn differently than accidental ones. (The bogus arson "trademarks" are similar to those used to convict Texan Cameron Todd Willingham, who suffered an even worse fate than Welton's: Willingham was executed for his "arson" in 2004.)

Reverence for the lineage of asparagus continues in epic yearly Anglican church festivities in Worcester, England, where in April celebrants obtained a special blessing for the vegetable by local priests as a costumed asparagus pranced through the street praising the stalks as representing "the generosity of God." Critics (including clergy from other parishes) likened the parades to a Monty Python sketch, and "an infantile pantomime," with one pleading plaintively, "Really, for [God's] sake," can't the Church of England offer "more dignified" worship?

Leading Economic Indicators

1) Andrew Bogut, signed as a free agent by the NBA's Cleveland Cavaliers in March and expected to be a key player in the team's quest to defend its league championship, checked into his first game and played 58 seconds before crashing into a bench and breaking his leg. For that 58 seconds, the Cavs owe Bogut $383,000. 2) Jose Calderon signed as a free agent with the Golden State Warriors in March, but the NBA-leading Warriors changed their mind (for unforeseen reasons) two hours after the deal and released Calderon. For his 119 minutes as a Warrior (6:06pm to 8:05pm), Calderon was paid $415,000.

Police Report

In May, as Taunton, Mass., police were about to arrest Amy Rebello-McCarthy, 39, for DUI after she left the road and crashed through several mailboxes (with the crash causing all of her tires to deflate), she, laughing, told officers there was one other thing: She had a bearded dragon in her bra (where it was riding while she drove). The lizard was turned over to animal control.

Felicia Nevins complained to reporters in May that the Pasco County (Florida) Sheriff's Office had improperly drawn attention to her on a matter of a purely personal nature – that she had called for help, concerned that the sperm she was storing for in vitro fertilization (kept under liquid nitrogen in a thermos) might explode. Deputies had placed the details (but not her name) on the office's Facebook page, but the Tampa Bay Times deduced her name from public sources.

Fine Points of the Law

In a legislative battle waged since a 1979 state court decision, some North Carolinians tried once again this year to change a state law that explicitly states that once a person (almost always, of course, a "female") has "consented" to an act of sexual intercourse, that consent cannot be withdrawn – even if the encounter turns violent. (The violence might be prosecuted as an "assault," but never the more serious crime of "rape.") Said state Sen. Jeff Jackson, whose bill to change the law failed in April to get a legislative hearing, "We're the only state in the country where 'no' doesn't mean 'no.'"

Bright Ideas

Skills: 1) In May, the British tribunal dealing with student cheating rejected the appeal of a law student who was caught taking an inclass exam with her textbook open (permitted) but containing handwritten notes in the margins - not permitted, but written in invisible ink legible via the UV light on her pen. 2) On testing day in March for Romania's 14and 15-year-olds, administrators of the country's popular DEX online dictionary, acting on suspicion, changed the definitions of two words likely to be improperly looked up by cheaters during the exam. "[H]undreds" of school searches for the words took place that morning, but administrators were still mulling an appropriate punishment for the cheaters (who were, of course, easily identified by their misapplication of the suspect words).

With limited trade, investment, and ownership rights, many Cuban producers are forced to improvise in order to bring products to market – like Orestes Estevez, a Havana winemaker, who finds condoms indispensable, according to an April Associated Press dispatch. The "most remarkable sight" the reporter saw was "hundreds of [open] bottles capped with condoms," which inflate from gases as the fruit ferments. When fermentation is done, the condom goes limp. (The AP also noted that fishermen use condoms to carry bait far from shore and which also increase tugging resistance when nibbling fish fight the line.)

Awesome!

India's supreme court approved an order recently that forced bars and liquor stores to close down if they were located less than 500 meters (1,640 feet) from state or national highways. The Times of India reported in April that the Aishwarya Bar in North Paravur, Kerala, is still (legally) operating at its old location even though it is clearly within the 500-meter restricted area. The owner explained that since he owns the land behind the bar, too, he had constructed a "serpentine" wooden maze in back and front that requires any entering customer to take the equivalent number of steps it would take to walk 500 meters. (A tax office official reluctantly accepted the arrangement.)

Good Grief

The 25th annual Austin Chronicle Short Story Contest

BY ROBERT FAIRES

Death, we know, is a part of life. It turns out to have been a big part of the 25th Austin Chronicle Short Story Contest, too.

In a large number of this year's entries, including the 10 finalists, characters experienced the loss of someone close or could see such a loss coming and were caught up in the process of grieving. In life, the void at the heart of that process can make feelings difficult to articulate, but in fiction, words can be found to describe the pain and turmoil inside, and we readers can understand what it means to endure the death of a sister who drove you crazy when she was alive, a parent when you yourself are still a child, a lover who doesn't speak your language.

Grief may not be something 20 we're eager to see in our own lives, but in the lives of these characters, it proved illuminating and memorable. So said the judges assembled for the contest ORT this year – all of whom had judged the contest the two years previous because, hey, you don't STORY want to break up the band when it works so well. They felt that the best captured not just the absence that we experience when someone dies but also our own transformation – as judge Annie La Ganga put it in describing the impact of one story, "You are a kind of ghost. The person you were when that person was alive is gone." The foursome discussed the finalists' merits in depth and with much admiration, and they came to consensus on the top stories and honorable mentions with surprising ease (one of the major reasons I didn't want this particular band broken up).

I bow humbly to them for their generosity and good nature in judging this year, as in previous years, and once more, the delight of the meal we shared was exceeded only by their company. I also honor the squadron of first-readers who ensured that each of the 373 submissions was read twice and ranked. My heartfelt gratitude to: Nick

Barbaro, Brian Barry, Wayne Alan Brenner, Katarina Brown, Jessi Cape, Mark Fagan,

Cassidy Frazier, Liz Franklin, Darlene Jones, Kimberley Jones, Michael King, Josh Kupecki, Sarah Marloff, Will McCarthy, Gerald McLeod, Kat McNevins, Tamar Price, James Renovitch, Karena Rogers, R.U. Steinberg, Greg Stitt, Jason Stout, Katie Walsh, Tucker Whatley, and Danielle White. Thanks also to our marketing gurus Dan Hardick, Karena Rogers, and Sarah Wolf; and co-sponsor BookPeople. In closing: The call for entries this year resulted in about the same number as last year, but our addition of an online submission process brought us a huge influx of stories from outside the U.S.: 41 tales from 16 countries on five continents. That's on top of entries from 32 other states, plus the District of Columbia. In its 25th year, the contest has truly become a global event, though half of the stories come from Central Texas. Our thanks to all of the writers who participated and to you, dear readers, without whom this contest couldn't exist.

THE WINNERS

FIRST PLACE: "The Shape of Human Hearts"

Eric Shattuck is a freelance writer living in Austin. His fiction has been published in more than a dozen journals, including The Nottingham Review and Neon Literary Magazine, and appeared on the Wigleaf list of Top 50 (Very) Short Fictions of 2017.

SECOND PLACE: "Why Eulagene?"

Emily West is a French translator specializing in scientific, technical, and commercial translation. Her work has been used to prosecute war criminals at the ICC and to sop up grease on fast food trays around the globe. She lives in East Austin and blogs about the language industry at www.frenchtranslation.expert.

THIRD PLACE: "An Interlude: Pig River"

Su-Yee Lin is a writer from New York. Her work has been published in Day One, The Offing, Electric Literature, Strange Horizons, Nashville Review, Interfictions, NANO Fiction, and elsewhere. A 2012 Fulbright fellow to China, she was also a 2014 fellow at the Center for Fiction.

HONORABLE MENTION: "For Danny, Twelve Years Old"

Lucas Loredo has had his work featured in Best American Short Stories, The Rumpus, The Washington Square Review, and The Southwest Review and has been profiled by Time Out New York, Juxtapoz, and The Wall Street Journal. He is now an MFA fellow at the Michener Center for Writers in his hometown.

HONORABLE MENTION: "Equilibrium"

Erin Lockwood was born in Mexico City with a formative stop in San Antonio before moving to the Northeast. After graduate school in New York City, she taught English at an all-boys private school there. Her return to Texas last summer sparked a desire to write. This is her first public effort.

OTHER FINALISTS

(in alphabetical order by author): Robert Glover, "Rowing" Robert Maslin, "Two Stepping" E.S. Sparks, "The Buffalo Do" Donna L. Turello, "Cherry Pie" Abe Louise Young, "A Person With No People"

THE JUDGES

RAUL GARZA won first place in the 22nd Austin Chronicle Short Story Contest with his story "In the Room." He wrote the plays Fantasmaville, which won the National Latino Playwriting Award; Confessions of a Mexpatriate; and "MyHEB," a Best of the Fest selection in the FronteraFest Short Fringe. He is also co-founder and creative director of TKO Advertising.

ANNIE LA GANGA is the author of Stoners and Self-Appointed Saints, A Memoir and creator-performer of the solo shows Surprise Annie, produced by Rubber Repertory, and The Major Arcana, produced with Portland Story Theater. With Rebecca Beegle, she runs the Grownup Lady Story Company, an enterprise for storytelling performance and coaching.

STEVE MOORE co-founded Physical Plant Theater in 1994 and has written most of its shows. Among his plays are Nightswim and The Kindermann Depiction, both recipients of the Austin Critics Table's David Mark Cohen New Play Award, and the text play Computer Simulation of the Ocean. He holds an MFA in playwriting from the Michener Center for Writers.

AMANDA EYRE WARD is the author of six novels, including How to Be Lost and Close Your Eyes, which was named in Kirkus' Best Books of 2011 and won the Elle magazine Fiction Book of the Year. Her most recent novel, The Nearness of You, was released this spring.

Second Place: "Why Eulagene?" by Emily West

For Christmas, the last time she was here, my sister gave me a Rubbermaid tub full of shit. Because, she said, I'm really hard to shop for.

I kept waiting for the anecdote, because it seemed like there would be one; you know, like half the gift is the story. But I guess on the giving end it all made a lot more sense, because the only other thing she said was, "From llamas!"

Check out these teasers for the second- and third-place winners. Like what you see? Read both stories in their entirety at austinchronicle.com/shortstory. "Cool. That's cool. Hey, thanks, G."

It seemed like such a vindictive thing to do, but I knew my sister. She wasn't vicious. She didn't do confrontation. And it was wrapped like a real gift. There was even a nativity gift tag. Little baby Jesus in a manger.

I gave her this bowl, this ceramic bowl that had been broken and then put back together with gold lacquer, so it shined at the cracks. It seemed so perfect when I picked it out, but then, when she was sitting there on the couch, kind of wrapped up in her own shoulders, it felt presumptuous, or I don't know, wrong. We were still broken.

Third Place: "An Interlude: Pig River" by Su-Yee Lin

So the pig said, "Get on," and he did. It was in the river with all the other dead pigs. The only difference was that this one was swimming. Wang Xun could feel its bloated sides between his knees; he clutched at the pig's neck as it swam slowly through the river of pigs that had transformed this tributary of the Huangpu River.

The pig didn't say anything more – its feet kept moving through the water but no air moved through its lungs. It barely seemed to notice Wang Xun on its back.

To tell the truth, Wang Xun didn't have much of an idea how he'd gotten here. Riding on the back of a dead pig. Sure, he had a slight inkling, maybe. There was the old woman up north. There were the dreams.

They swam up the river. There were clumps of pig carcasses in different areas like an obstacle course, like the gyres of pollutants out in the ocean, but pig-shaped. They were bruised in large patches, white and then a dark stain underneath the skin. They floated on their sides or on their backs. The river stank. Wang Xun tried not to look at them. They were diseased, of course. Why else would they be in the river.

The Shape of Human Hearts

The First Place winner in the 2017 Austin Chronicle Short Story Contest

BY ERIC SHATTUCK

The light is close, now. A week ago, Hamid saw it through the window, watched buildings in the distance vanish behind a white curtain. Shadows obliterated, everything flattened out, made cartoonish. Hamid and Connie are here, waiting to be swallowed up.

They stand in the kitchen, check to see if their waxpaper-wrapped rations will finally come slithering down the chute, both of them knowing it won't happen. Connie has a single dimple that appears whenever she's upset. Hamid used to dart in and kiss it, and she would swat at him, smiling in spite of herself. He can't kiss it away anymore.

She takes his hand and draws a square on his palm with her finger, which means: emergency wafers again. Their UniConverse translation collars haven't picked up a signal in days, and neither of them can understand the other's words. For a while they tried anyway, speaking slowly, simply, resorting to grunts and gestures. But there was something ugly about it, some atavistic shadow of their ancestors crouched in womblike caves.

Before this, they had only ever taken the collars off to sleep. Looking at her now, the ring of paler flesh around her throat, makes Hamid feel strange and a little sad, like he is seeing the ghost of a long-worn wedding band around someone's finger.

The emergency wafers are bitter and doughy. Hamid smiles at his wife, but her thoughts are somewhere else. When he stands up to go back into the kitchen, she pulls him back down. She presses her mouth against his, pulls at his shirt with a rough urgency, and for a little while they have no need for words. Afterward, he lies on top of her and listens to her heart and she kisses the crown of his head over and over.

Once, she'd wanted to learn Urdu. A few days after he proposed, Connie told him she wanted to have a conversation with him just once in his own tongue, without the collars. She'd gotten the idea from an old movie. Hamid teased her about it, and she sulked for days. He hadn't intended to hurt her only, it was odd to imagine her being such a romantic. The first time he gave her a Valentine's Day card, she remarked that hearts didn't really look that way. She thought the whole thing was silly. He had turned it into a little game, hunched over the coffee table every year with his scissors and red craft paper, trimming (careful now) the delicate shapes of the aorta, the arteries, the superior and inferior vena cava.

Hamid looks at her now, asleep on the air mattress, and wishes more than anything that he had never teased her.

Sometimes he whispers to her while she naps. Little things, funny phrases, words whose meanings have escaped him, or which he never knew. Once the lyrics of a song came to him out of the blue, and he spoke them to her like a poem. Or else he will tell her a meaningless secret that he's never told anyone else, like the time he stole a candy bar from the middle school charity sale.

Where do these words go, after he utters them? Do they stay with her, buried someplace deep, like slivers of ice? Sometimes Hamid thinks he can feel them drifting around overhead, filling up the apartment. Little displacements of air. He doesn't want to believe that they are nothing.

He goes back into the kitchen and peers up into the ration chute, as if maybe there's just a jam, something wedged in at the wrong angle. The light outside is shining in through two pairs of black curtains. Parting them is like staring at the sun. Even with his eyes closed, he can see red. Hamid blinks, forces himself to look at the wall of light. The enormity of it. It is stalking toward them, inch by inch. Very soon it will pour in, like water, and he doesn't know what will happen then; he imagines it spilling down onto the baseboards, filling up the apartment, carrying them off on a blinding tide, himself and Connie, still asleep on her air mattress.

Hamid returns to the bedroom and sits crosslegged beside her. The room is so bright that he can't tell if her dimple is still there or not. He reaches out, almost touches her cheek to find out, but decides against it. He would prefer not to know. She looks so peaceful, so unafraid, that he can't bring himself to wake her, so instead he takes her hand gently in his and squeezes his eyes shut and traces with his finger against her upturned palm again and again the shape of a human heart.

Ice Flow

As an elegy to the ice, Kathy Dunn Hamrick Dance Company's Glacier aestheticized doom but left us plenty of edge

BY JONELLE SEITZ

Given the pensive direction that choreographer Kathy Dunn Hamrick's work has taken lately - the subtle resistance of last fall's The Four (3) Seasons, the driving inevitability of last May's More or Less - I expected a dance called Glacier to hurt. And then, opening night happened to fall on the same day the president announced his decision to pull the U.S. out of the Paris climate agreement. After the show, the dancers at the Long Center, didn't even bow. "It's over," mouthed lighting and sound designer Stephen Pruitt from his spot at the back of the house when the audience wasn't sure what to do.

As an elegy to the ice, the work aestheticized doom but left us plenty of edge. For this work, Hamrick supplemented the seven dancers of her company, in aqua mesh tops and leggings, with just as many guest artists, in white pants and raincoat-like jackets. The guest corps functioned as both a chorus, amplifying the action, and a second layer, absorbing and reacting to the motions of the first – a reminder that nothing occurs in isolation. Pruitt's sound design, an amalgamation of percussion and atmospheric electronica, set an ominous tone beginning with an unsettling low rumble, present even as the audience entered the theatre. The lighting, on > the other hand, began in the idyllic: dapples of violet and blue, reflections off the ice and water, danced across the walls - their exposed rough bricks serving well to situate us in a natural world – as a gentle sun warmed the dancers' upturned faces. Before long, however, reflected light gave way to shadows, and the projections morphed into blurrily human forms. The guest corps dancers lined the back of the theatre and were the first to melt into the floor; once that happened, it wasn't long before they slid, viscously, offstage. Groups of company dancers began in majestic stances and deepcored movement, engineered from the whole torso. They broke off in floes, were swept up by currents, shattered into jagged shards, and tumbled over each other in gyres, and they, too, eventually melted away,

But to say that the dance was about melting ice would be oversimplify things. Perhaps the work's greatest accomplishment was convoluting objective events of physical change with the wilderness of human emotion, imbuing water molecules with feelings of loneliness, community, fear, and loss of control. The last dancer onstage, Jessica Boone, clasped a partner's hand before her abandonment and final furied solo. The solid. unhurried glacier holds itself together with aplomb we might aspire to, until it falls apart, dispassionately and impressively, in chunks and fissures. As audience members, we keep vigil to all this, but there is, it seems here, nothing we can do.

2017 will go down in history for many

In filstory for many things. The year we took a step backward in time, in rights, in equality. For me, I think it'll also be remembered for its protests – the year millennials took to the streets en masse demanding equal rights for women, for queer and trans folks, for immigrants, for black people, Latinx, and Muslims. Sunday – in honor of Pride Month and the day before the first anniversary of the Pulse nightclub massacre – queers across the country will march against bathroom bills, religious liberty laws, for the right to adopt, foster, pee, and marry. For protection in our jobs and housing. The Texas

Equality March for Unity and Pride is one of many sister marches to D.C.'s National

Equality March. Organized by Queer Rights ATX, a group of queer and trans Texas activists, Sunday's protest will include speakers Fatima Mann from Counter Balance ATX, former Houston Mayor Annise Parker, and activist Ray Hill who's known for many things including his work with Harvey Milk. At a time when rights are being stripped away, let's return to our roots. After all, the first Pride was a protest.

"BETH CONSETTA RUBEL: HIGHER LEARNING: EDUCATIONAL TOYS" George Washington Carver Museum and Cultural Center, 1165 Angelina

www.bethconsettarubel.com Through June 24

Race in America is both hard and soft. Sometimes we want it diluted to nonexistence. Other times we want it solid and unavoidable. Is it a social construct or a legitimate distinction? That ambivalence is central to Beth Consetta Rubel's "Higher Learning: Educational Toys." A series of colored pencil portraits features influential African-Americans including Hattie McDaniel, Prince, Snoop Dogg, and President Obama. Each of the portraits is made on a brown paper bag, suggesting the fragility of paper, the temporality of trash, and the mundanity of low-end consumerism. It is a poignant choice when dealing with such powerful personalities. Obama's mouth is agape, sucking on a giant pink ice cream scoop. This, along with Rubel's fluid, illustrative drawing style, make it a personable caricature, an effect emphasized by the texture of the bag, most notable in the seam that bisects Obama's face. The seam echoes the crack in the famous daguerreotype of a smiling Abraham Lincoln at the end of the Civil War. It is a satisfying connection to make between two presidents whose legacies run so historically parallel to one another.

A few steps away, an entire wall re-creates a typical living room, complete with wallpaper and a potted plant. A large box TV sits on a gray dresser. Onscreen is the familiar Cosby family living room, along with Bill Cosby himself. He sits in an easy chair with Rudy on his lap, reading to her from a copy of his book, Fatherhood, as a toppling bottle spills a cascade of colorful pills. Just behind Cosby are his TV wife, Clair Huxtable; his real wife, Camille, clutching a prescription bag and smiling broadly; Damon Wayans, who described Cosby's victims as "un-rape-able"; and Whoopi Goldberg, who vigorously defended Cosby from rape allegations. Even Woody Allen and Bill O'Reilly make sly appearances. Cosby flashes his famous coy eye roll, as though his waterfall of inebriates is only a naughty joke. The figures have the same caricature loudness that the paper bag portraits do, which lends the collage a darkly humorous edge. To top it off, the collage has been automated so that some features, notably the book and the pills, slowly rise and fall. If the subject were not so ugly, it would be charming.

Rubel is not sympathetic to Cosby, any more than she is to Rachel Dolezal, the woman who a couple of years ago admitted that, despite the fact that she had been presenting herself as black, she had actually been born to a white family. As with Cosby, a wall of the gallery is dedicated to what Rubel calls the Dolezally Dolly, a doll that can be reversed into the white version of Dolezal, or the black version. Rubel has designed mock packaging for the doll and accessories (Soul Glow, etc.). While the installation is ruthlessly sarcastic, an accompanying video, in which children play with the doll while being asked questions about what "trans black" is, allows room for nuance. One little girl, who happens to be African-American, says she has no problem with Dolezal, as long as Dolezal feels like she is being herself.

Rubel has a razor for antagonists like Cosby and Dolezal, but she seems less angry than sad for the proud history of blackness in America. It is a history which many times has been brought low by the pitfalls of human frailty, political greed, and the complexities of race – an idea none of us truly comprehends, but which we so often approach with an unyielding, dangerous conviction. – Sam Anderson-Ramos

CLASSICAL MUSIC

THE BLANTON: BEAT THE RUSH The

Austin Chamber Music Center's Michelle Schumann, even busier than usual this month, tickles and tackles the ivories for this release of her new album, The Late Show, featuring works by Graham Reynolds (Austin) and Ludwig van Beethoven (Vienna), supercharging this latest of the Blanton's Beat the Rush series. Bonus: Schumann and Reynolds talking about the creative process itself. (When reached at his typical haunt in some Austrian dive bar, Herr Beethoven remarked, "Yo, I've been dead for more than 190 years, Michelle'd better palaver with that longhaired vegan mensch who knows too damned much about mustard.") Thu., June 15, 5:30pm. The Blanton Museum of Art, 200 E. MLK, 512/471-7324. Free. www.blantonmuseum.org.

ACMC: THE BLUE BASH This fancy fundraiser is Austin Chamber Music Center's grandest night of the year, featuring performances by clarinetist Håkan Rosengren and Michelle Schumann and Julius Calvert, the wine-enhanced pleasures of a threecourse meal, the poetical qwertyings of Typewriter Rodeo, and more. With the whole thing hosted by KUT's Dr. Bob Duke for maximum charm. Sat., June 10, 6pm. Renaissance Austin Hotel, 9721 Arboretum Blvd, 512/454-0026. $150-250. www.austinchambermusic.org.

VISUAL ARTS

EVENTS

ELISABET NEY MUSEUM: NEY DAY This is a time for celebrating Elisabet Ney and your own artmaking activities, with sculpting and art demos, food trucks, hula hoopers, bookmaking, and more, right there in the heart of Hyde Park. Bonus: live music all afternoon long. Sat., June 10, noon-5pm. 304 E. 44th, 512/974-1625. Free. www.austintexas.gov/elisabetney.

OPENING BALE CREEK ALLEN GALLERY: TONY FITZPATRICK Sure, an

that big bruiser of a Chicago artist is back in Austin with a new show of his work, those mixed-media collages and drawings and so on, the sort of eye-trapping things that often resemble complex tattoo flash informed by the entire history of art on this planet. Recommended. Reception: Fri., June 9, 7-10pm. 916 Springdale. www.balecreekallengallery.com.

BIG MEDIUM: ISLAND OASIS MIRAGE

Michael Krueger, Kathleen McShane, and Barbara Weissberger explore images and objects in ways that challenge notions of representation, often employing the languages of sculpture, drawing, painting, and photography simultaneously. Reception: Fri., June 9, 7-10pm. 916 Springdale. www.canopyaustin.com.

CO-LAB PROJECTS: UNREALPOLITIK In which artists Mark Hilton, Elizabeth McDonald Schwaiger, Soda_Jerk, and Ted Carey use dark humor, pop culture, and cryptic imagery to confront the foreboding quandary of alt-facts, fake news, gaslighting, and cognitive dissonance that confound this benighted nation. Reception: Sat., June 10, 7-10pm. 721 Congress. www.co-labprojects.org.

DE STIJL: EN BOLA This new show features Austin collective Los Outsiders' Michael Anthony Garciá, Roberto Jackson Harrington, and Hector Hernandez working with a trio of Texas artists: Lisette Chavez, Jean-Sebastien Boncy, and Mauro Martinez. Reception: Sat., June 10, 7-10pm. 1006 W. 31st. www.destijlaustin.com.

SECRET SERIES: SECRET

FURNITURE Last month's "Secret Objects" show, which followed the "Secret Lighting" show, brought brilliant works of sculpture at the fiercest intersection of art and craft. expressed via a diversity of exotic and mundane materials. And now here's the final display of works in this three-part series, again curated by Rachel Koper, Mark Macek, and Brian David Johnson, featuring all manner of ... furniture? Yeah, and considering the roster of artists participating, we'd say we're intrigued to see what's up with that. But that'd be bullshit, tbh. Because, having witnessed the glory – no, really, the glory – of what was presented in those first two Secret shows, we're pretty much jonesing to see what paragons of practical beauty this one-weekend-only exhibition will fill the Cloud Tree Gallery with. Reception: Fri., June 9. 6-11pm. 3411 E. Fifth. www.cloudtreestudiosandgallery.com.

SOCCER WATCH BY NICK BARBARO

There are World Cup Qualifiers worldwide, Thursday through Tuesday, June 8-13... The U.S.A. has a tough double: hosting Trinidad & Tobago in Denver at 7pm, Thu., June 8, and then at Mexico on Sun., June 11 at 7:30pm (both on Fox Sports). Realistically, a win and a loss would probably be enough to keep the team on track for Russia 2018; any less than that would put their backs against the wall when the campaign resumes in the fall.

The U-20 World Cup ended for the U.S. with a quarterfinal loss to Venezuela on Sunday; the semifinals, Uruguay-Venezuela and Italy-England, are Thu., June 8, and the final is Sun., June 11 on Fox Sports... Real Madrid put in a relentless second-half attacking performance, and wore down a great Juventus defense, 4-1, to lift the European Champions League trophy Saturday in the traditional European season finale.

DAY TRIPS BY GERALD E. MCLEOD

Collin Street Bakery isn't just for Christmas fruitcakes. The company has expanded to four locations along interstate highways around Texas, but there is still something special about the small retail store at the company's headquarters in Corsicana.

When you enter the narrow and crowded sales room the smell of something in the oven hits you with a warm embrace. The shiny glass cases are filled will all kinds of delights. Neat rows of cookies, bags of fresh rolls, and beautiful pies tempt the taste buds. There is even a sandwich shop in case you missed lunch.

Of course, you can also get their signature fruitcake or pineapple cake in souvenir tins at any time of the year.

The company began in 1896 when August Weidmann arrived in town. The first large discovery of oil west of the Mississippi had occurred two years before when the city drilled for water, but hit black gold instead. The community was very supportive of the young baker from Germany.

The town's fortunes rose and fell with the oil market, but the bakery's DeLuxe Fruitcakes began a steady climb in popularity. The Texas fruitcakes became world famous in 1914 when a troupe from Ringling Brothers Circus bought the cakes to mail around the world to family and friends. Since then the mail-order business has been the company's main focus.

Collin Street Bakery's fruitcakes and baked goods can only be purchased in Texas directly from the bakery. The main store is at 401 W. Seventh Ave. in Corsicana. Southern plantation-style satellite stores are in Corsicana on I-45, Waco on I-35, Lindale on I-20, and Greenville on I-30.

On the Edge

Dripping Springs keeps growing, but can the dining scene keep up? BY MELANIE HAUPT

There were about 80 people in my graduating class at Dripping Springs High School in 1990. Back then, about 1,000 people lived in Dripping, and the landscape between it and Austin along Highway 290 was a whole lot of nothing. These days, about 2,000 people live in Dripping Springs proper, and about 30,000 live in what's known as the ETJ (extraterritorial jurisdiction), the unincorporated "noman's-land" that stretches from just west of Oak Hill to the Dripping Springs city limit.

This growth has meant great things for dining out in Dripping. When I was a teenager, our options were limited to Dairy Queen, a crappy Tex-Mex joint, and Hamburger Hill, where we would frequently decamp after school for late-afternoon mozzarella sticks and hamburgers. The nearest "real" restaurant was the Salt Lick, where many of us worked during the summer.

These days, while there's still a generous complement of barbecue and pizza joints, more and more locally owned restaurants are popping up along Highway 290, making Dripping Springs and its surrounds a much more compelling place to eat than ever before. But does all this growth spell success for all of these new local restaurants?

Everyone knows by now about Pieous and its attached coffee shop, Pie-é-Tea, where the presence of kouign-amann and Vietnamese coffee on the menu speak to the area's growing cosmopolitanism. In fact, Pieous' near-instantaneous success was a likely clue to entrepreneurs that people between Austin and Dripping Springs were starving for interesting food. Stanley's Farmhouse Pizza cohabitates with Jester King Brewery quite comfortably, and Treaty Oak Distilling enjoys prime positioning on the highway.

There's also the excellent Lox, Box & Barrel, which

"We thought it would take about five years for us to take off out here, but we've been embraced by this community and they want us to succeed here."

SASCHA BIESI

recently celebrated its first year in business and serves a breathtakingly delicious Reuben sandwich, along with house-made pickles, bacon, and the namesake smoked salmon. Lunch and brunch do a brisk trade, although proprietor Sebastien Caillabet, who previously operated the Celtic Seafare supper club and smoked salmon operation, admits to having to make adjustments to the menu and operating hours to adjust to the area's habits and tastes. "We're trying to figure out what the community wants," he says as a steady trickle of regulars start to show up for weekday lunch.

You also see established Austin brands setting up shop in the ETJ, most recently the beloved vegan bakery Skull & Cakebones, who through pure happenstance (and tough economic reality) wound up with an enormous space to call their own on the cusp of the Hill Country.

After raising nearly $38,000 in a December 2015 crowdfunding campaign, co-owners Sascha Biesi and Yauss Berenji found themselves at a crossroads. They'd raised all this money, but it wasn't nearly enough to put down roots in Austin. "We had this Kickstarter campaign in which we claimed we'd open a food truck in Central Austin," says Berenji. "But as we started to think about what we wanted our business model to be and the logistics of having a facility that's far away from our retail space, we realized that maybe we should think about allocating these funds to something more permanent, rather than something that would be a stepping stone."

The pair were looking seriously at a place on the Eastside, one that would put them right in the heart of their established market. But the realities of Austin real estate deflated that idea like so much stale baking powder.

"It was $30,000 a month and it was going to take 16 to 18 months to renovate, during which we were going to have to pay rent, and it was going to be $400,000 in renovation fees," says Berenji.

"It was a wake-up call for what it was really going to cost to put something down in Austin," Biesi adds.

Ultimately, the barriers to access presented by the City of Austin's permitting process and the unreasonable cost of square footage made it effectively impossible for Skull & Cakebones to set up permanent shop in Austin. And the mushrooming growth of the greater Dripping Springs area made a move outside the Austin city limits doable. The combined retail cafe and commercial kitchen opened for business in January of this year after about nine months of renovation and construction.

The response has been overwhelmingly positive, according to Biesi. "We thought it would take about five years for us to take off out here, but we've been embraced by this community and they want us to succeed here. I'm overwhelmed by how welcoming everyone is out here. Not that people aren't like that in Austin, but the business side of it. the money side of it, the wheeling and dealing side of it ..."

"That part doesn't really exist out here," says Berenji, completing her partner's thought.

A couple of weeks later, on a Saturday morning at Rolling in Thyme & Dough, situated in the heart of Dripping Springs, just past the intersection of Highway 290 and Ranch Road 12 (there's a traffic light there now; it used to just be a four-way stop), there's a line about 10 people deep at the counter, patiently perusing the menu and waiting to place their orders for freshly made pastries and sandwiches.

The vibe is relaxed; no one is in a hurry to get anywhere anytime soon. There are young parents with small children and babies, older couples lingering over coffee, and young couples who'd look perfectly at home at the nearest comic book store. There's a table with a sign indicating that it's reserved on weekday mornings for the shop's "regular gentleman's group" that has taken up residence around

8am. For the past decade-plus (Thyme & Dough will mark 12 years in business in October), the bakery has guaranteed its longevity by listening to its growing customer base while holding firm to its values.

"Basically, I did what people were asking for," says Fabienne Bollom, who hails from Belgium. "They asked if I was going to make cinnamon rolls. I never heard of it before, but I make it. I want freshness and to create a place where people want to sit and enjoy good food." Bollom, whose son Jerome helps manage the restaurant, negotiates the demands of the town's changing population via Thursday night bistro dinners and a newly relaunched Friday night beer garden on the patio, which finds Jerome flipping burgers both carnivore and vegan from a food trailer outside.

HOT BOILED CRAWFISH EVERY TUESDAY & SATURDAY NIGHT

WHAT MAKES OUR CRAWFISH SO SPECIAL?

We season our boil with a special blend of seasonings and fresh vegetables and soak them for as long as needed so the flavor permeates deep into the tender tail meat. Then we serve 'em up with corn and potatoes just like down on the bayou. Y'all come and pass a good time with your friends and neighbors!

"I want to be separate from a hole in the wall; I make the order one by one. If you need to wait 45 minutes, I'm sorry. That's us, and that's who I want to stay. The city people are just rush, rush, rush. A few years ago, I wanted to do fast and fast and fast. And I realized I cannot change, they need to change. If they want to move to the country, you are in the country."

On the other end of town is Epicure, a tiny bistro with a sprawling, impeccably curated wine list and a sophisticated menu, aiming to bring a little bit of the city to the country. Co-owner and wine connoisseur Jerry Gray, who moved to Dripping Springs a few years ago with his partner, executive chef Julio Llop, explains, "We opened out here because we didn't feel like there was great food out here. We also had gone to several wine bars in Austin and were rather nonplussed by the lack of choice in wines by the glass and the fact that wine bars don't have a robust menu offering from the kitchen. And why should you have to leave Dripping Springs to get this?"

"We've been so embraced," says Gray. "The entire time we were building and developing this concept and building out the space, I was anxious that somebody else was going to beat us to the punch. And right up to the moment when we were just about to open and I realized that nobody was behind us, then you begin to think, well, are we insane? And then we opened up and we realized, no, we're not." Epicure marked one year in business on April 28.

But having a successful restaurant in Dripping Springs isn't necessarily all topflight wine and delicious pastries enjoyed at a leisurely pace. The rampant, unchecked growth of the area presents some huge, potentially insurmountable challenges. Dripping Springs is, effectively, the Wild West for developers, with thousands of new homes in 13 neighborhoods slated for construction in the near future.

The median home price in the Dripping Springs area is approximately $390,000, which poses an affordability problem for service industry workers (and teachers, and firefighters, and custodians, and so on). The lack of affordable housing in Dripping Springs and the ETJ means that the labor pool is extraordinarily shallow. Restaurants have a hard time attracting potential candidates, and turnover is high. "Now Hiring" signs stay up in perpetuity, and restaurateurs must learn how to operate without sufficient staff.

Llop says, "It's a big challenge. It affects your creativity, it affects what you're capable of doing. Whenever we change the menu we have to think about executability. I'm about

Dear Glutton, My friends and I hike the Greenbelt almost every weekend, but our typical bag of chips and cooler of beers routine is getting old. Help us step up our picnic game! – Hungry Hungry Hiker

Dear Hiker,

In my experience, the only thing Austinites take more seriously than our outdoor time is snack time. And there are few things better than finding an activity that combines both. Fortunately for you, in a city that's rife with urban parks, there are many places where you can grab an excellent picnic on your way to swim. If I were you, I'd step up my Greenbelt game by focusing each excursion on its potential culinary accompaniments. Also fortunately for you, I am an expert excursion planner; I don't like to brag, but in high school I was the founder and president of the picnic club (to date, probably my proudest accomplishment).

For your first outing, I'd start with a trip to the Twin Falls access point of the Greenbelt, which this early in the summer should still be running high. Just off the MoPac Expressway, this hidden trail has no right to be as bucolic as it is. And yet, about 100 feet into your hike, the sound of traffic will fade and vanish, drowned out by the sound of rushing water from the titular falls, where you can swim, sunbathe, and, if you're a jerk, blast trance music as loud as possible from your portable speaker.

Just 10 minutes outside of Downtown, it's the ideal place to kick off your urban(ish) picnic adventures!

Since it's summer, and you'll be sweating buckets by noon, you'll want to get an early start. Reward yourself for getting out of bed with a couple of the legendary conchas from Casa Maria, dense and rich with butter and eggs, their tops crackling with a sugar glaze. I'm particularly fond of the pinktopped variety, which look as festive as they taste. Your next stop should be Radio Coffee & Beer, for a rocket-fuel strength cold brew or, if you're avoiding caffeine this month, some house-made kombucha on tap. If you're as greedy as I am, you'll also want to pick up a couple of tacos from the Veracruz All Natural taco truck parked out back. You really can't go wrong, but I find that their potato & chorizo taco has the perfect amount of spice, and their migas taco is consistently crispy, laced with caramelized onions and tomatoes. Grab a couple of packs of salsa for the road, too.

By now, it's probably close to noon, and you're ready to start hiking. Make your way down the road to Wheatsville Co-op, where you can pack yourself a supplementary picnic of locally made hummus, nice cheese, a baguette, maybe some veggies or grapes. You're in this for the long haul, and excessive provisioning is the secret to picnic success. Throw everything in your backpack with some cold drinks from the cooler, and start hiking. Twin Falls is ridiculously popular on the weekends, but the crowds of boombox-toting frat boys and hordes of children that populate the lower pools rarely make it more than a mile up; persist in your hiking and you will be rewarded with relative solitude, although a few curious dogs may still wander through your picnic.

And after you're tired of the outdoors, you can gather your crew and make your way to the delightfully old-school Casino South Side Lounge, where you can eat peanuts, shoot pool, and listen to selections from their fantastic jukebox while nursing a gin & tonic or two. It's the perfect way to unwind after a long day in the sun. two to three people short in the kitchen, so I have to base the menu on that. The current menu is based on when I had another cook in the kitchen, and he lasted two weeks, so there's more on here than we can handle.

"We do everything from scratch here. We don't have a freezer, microwave, or can openers. So everything we do is fresh and we prep daily. For two people, it's a ginormous menu. So I'm going to go back and make the menu smaller."

But there's also the issue of traffic. The rapid growth in the area has contributed to the rise in traffic fatalities along Highway 290. Indeed, what used to take a cool 20 minutes door to door from Dripping Springs to South Austin now takes at least twice that, depending on the time of day, and often in bumper-to-bumper traffic. From May to October 2016, eight people were killed in accidents on Highway 290, which the Hays County Sheriff's office attributes to the housing boom alongside a 60 mileper-hour thoroughfare. As such, potential laborers from Austin are socked in by congestion along a deadly stretch of highway – would a $12 an hour job be worth that kind of hassle?

Rapid expansion and unchecked development. A rising cost of living and labor shortages. Horrific, dangerous traffic. All of this sounds eerily familiar, doesn't it? What on the surface sounds like an antidote to the stressors of life in Austin looks more and more like the same problems on a smaller scale under closer inspection. After the contentious city council election in May, Dripping Springs faces a defining moment: remain a charming hamlet with its own unique personality informed by locally owned restaurants and shops, or become just another nondescript exurb dotted with chain coffee shops and fast-food joints on the way to somewhere else?

Are You Sitting Comfortably?

ATX TV Fest brings FX's Fargo and Legion's Noah Hawley back home

BY JOSH KUPECKI

When the ATX Television Festival returns this weekend (starting tonight, Thu., June 8), fans, creators, stars, and industry folks descend on the town to talk turkey (get that script to someone who matters), reunite with old friends (Commander Adama and President Roslin), catch a look at upcoming series premieres (see "Quick Picks," at right, for more), and say goodbye to beloved friends (kudos The Leftovers, you went out well). As FX's Fargo and Legion creator (and part-time Austin resident) Noah Hawley said, "This festival coincides with the elevated nature of television as a medium. Rather than, say, a fan convention, the fest becomes a place where artists can discuss their work and people can learn the craft. The communal experience of sitting with an audience and watching a show you haven't seen yet. It's hard to beat."

Hawley would know a thing or two about that "elevated nature," as he's been a witness to this current wave of sophisticated serialized TV. A writer and producer since 2005 (Bones), Hawley hit pay dirt when MGM, who had been trying to develop a TV version of the Coen brothers' 1996 hit Fargo, took him on board to work on the show. Three seasons in, it has become one of the most entertaining and beguiling dramas in a landscape of (lesser) entertaining and beguiling dramas. Small-town cops routinely face off against forces of violent nihilism, but the juxtaposition of the "You betcha!" Minnesota nice ethos and the bloody (and often completely avoidable) mayhem Hawley creates take that blueprint the Coens originated and sends it into the stratosphere. There have been strong antagonists every season (Billy Bob Thornton, Jean Smart, Bokeem Woodbine) but season 3 may have surpassed them all in the embodiment of the ruthless German expat V.M. Varga (David Thewlis), a gleefully malicious bulimic who may or may not be the head of a global criminal empire. With his villains, Hawley said, "It's really about a showdown coming between one way of living and another way of living. For me, the idea of a villain is only interesting if the villain is both a person and an idea." But is Varga's bulimia a scratch in the armor? "For a character who seems to be in control at all times, bulimia is an attempt to control your own body, while at the same time giving in to your baser nature, your hunger. But then one is chained to that hunger. It's definitely a flaw in his veneer."

That was the closest Hawley came to giving hints of any further plot points (the current season finale airs Wed., June 21), apart from coyly offering potential closure for Carrie Coon's Chief Gloria Burgle's consistent technological invisibility: "Part of it is that she's a woman, but she's very much out of step with the modern world. I can't say too much more than that." Coon is having a banner year, with the aforementioned The Leftovers, but really, it's the entire ensemble that has been superlatively in sync, with Ewan McGregor's dual turn as a pair of twin brothers in an epic struggle over a stamp that represents a lifelong sibling feud, Mary Elizabeth Winstead as the competitive bridgeplaying brains, and A Serious Man's Michael Stuhlbarg as an unceasingly put-upon lawyer. And of course, there's Peter and the Wolf.

"I knew that I wanted to use it," said Hawley of the classic children's album that reorientates the viewer in the fourth episode, after a sojourn to Los Angeles. The tale of Peter, his animal friends, and that big bad wolf on French horns is a particularly deft move on a show that throughout its run has had some of the best-integrated music cues on television, to, as Hawley said, "make the music a part of the story. You're assigning musical cues to certain characters, and it's something we do anyway, we just don't call attention to it."

Whether the wolf gets Peter or vice versa, odds are that there will be a lot of blood on the Minnesota snow by season's end.

Fargo panel with executive producers Noah Hawley and John Cameron, cast members Mary Elizabeth Winstead and Michael Stuhlbarg, and moderated by Dan Fienberg from The Hollywood Reporter, Fri., June 9, 4:15pm, Paramount.

The World Ends When It Comes at Night

TEXAS DIRECTOR TREY EDWARD SHULTS PURGES HIS DEMONS WITH LATEST FILM by Richard Whittaker

"Let go." Those words have special meaning for Trey Edward Shults. It's not just that they open his new film, It Comes at Night, but they were the last things he said to his father before he died.

The Texas director has drawn on family intimacy before. His debut feature, 2015's award-winning Krisha, starred family members and drew directly upon their shared history, while his new film parses those experiences into a horror-tinged exploration of grief. Paul (Joel Edgerton), Sarah (Carmen Ejogo), and Travis (Kelvin Harrison Jr.) are the last remnants of a nuclear family, holed up in rural upstate New York, trying to evade a pandemic that has seemingly wiped out most of the world. Or maybe not. For Shults, that's the core of the film. He said. "It's about the unknown, and it's about fear of the unknown - the ultimate unknown being death."

That was a lesson he learned in part from the death of his estranged father from pancreatic cancer. Shults said, "He was fighting. He was not ready to die. He was not ready to let go, and you could tell. For me it was miserable, because I knew he needed to, because he was in so much pain, and it was awful. I said those words. I said. 'It's OK, you can let go. I love you, just let go,' and he audibly let go."

Three months after that moment, he started writing It Comes at Night, with the story seen through the eyes of 17-year-old Travis. Shults said, "I see a lot of myself in Travis. He's a good kid, and he's a good person, and he's naive, but he just wants the best." At the same time, he's living in a world where the threat of violence, of disease, even of mercy killings, is always just at the edge of the forest. "Pretty soon, I think you start realizing his nightmares are a gateway into how he's processing his environment."

Because the world is explored from Travis' viewpoint, it is Edgerton as Paul, the father trying to keep his family together and safe, who is more often the protagonist. For that casting, he had another Texas filmmaker to thank. Shults worked on some test shoots in Austin for Midnight Special, and when director Jeff Nichols found out he was a filmmaker in his own right, he demanded that Shults send him the original short version of Krisha. The pair stayed in contact, with Shults describing the Cannes-lauded Nichols as "like a big brother filmmaker if I need help or anything." It Comes at Night opens June 9. For showtimes and review, see Film Listings.

The help came when he was casting Paul, and he increasingly thought of Edgerton. The Australian actor had worked with Nichols on both Midnight Special and Loving, and Shults knew his ease as an actor with silence and space would work with his script's quiet foreboding. He said, "I texted Jeff and he was like, 'Don't worry, I'm on it.' He sent Joel a text: 'Take this kid seriously.' Joel read the script the night he got it, had feedback the following day, which was Thursday; we met Monday in L.A., and Tuesday he decided he wanted to do the movie."

There's a strange balance in those filmmaking connections allowing Shults to tell a deeply personal story that spun out of the darkest and most dysfunctional shadows of his own family. "I think, at the end of it, it is very cathartic. I've always seen this movie as a purge, of purging my demons and getting it out."

It Comes at Night explores the terror of family

NIGHT

(R. 97 min.)

Compassion kills in dire times. That's the widdershins message of Krisha director Shults' sophomore feature, a severely downbeat, cabin-in-the-woods horror show that entwines the claustrophobic paranoia of George Romero's Night of the Living Dead with the locked-door tension of Roger Corman's Day the World Ended and a febrile case of Cabin Fever to boot. It's a lean, mean, effective IT COMES AT thriller that offers no explanation as to the means or method of D: Trey Edward Shults; with Joel Edgerton, Christopher Abbott, humanity's endgame while simul-Carmen Ejogo, Riley Keough, taneously focusing on the trip-wire Kelvin Harrison Jr., Griffin Robert frailty of a nuclear family trapped Faulkner, David Pendleton, in the hungry, thirsty days of the dead - or is it, indeed, the dead? credit, Shults keeps us in the dread dark (often literally), and instead focuses on spouses Paul (Edgerton) and Sarah (Ejogo), who along with son Travis (Harrison Jr.), have holed up in an old house in the woods, effectively maintaining a daily routine - two meals a day, keep those doors locked at all times - as an unseen force roams outside their quadruple-locked home and an unseen force infects others with a grisly, Ebola-esque fate. All's well that doesn't end well when desperate intruder Will (Abbott) bursts into the house in the middle of the night and manages to convince Paul that his wife and daughter are dying of thirst just eight miles away.

After an ambush on the road, the now-allied pair manage to bring Will's wife Kim (Keough) he is their comic book champion come to life ("Tra la LAAAA!"), and crazy adventures ensue. (The flip-flop between the Mr. Krupp/Captain Underpants personas, triggered by a fingersnap in one instance and a splash of water in the other, is the movie's best gag.) But a bigger threat to George, Harold, and their classmates enters the scene in the form of the school's new science teacher, a strangely coiffed, short little man who sounds like Dr. Strangelove (Kroll has a ball voicing the character), a madman intent upon ridding the world of laughter due to the ridicule he has endured his entire life given his unfortunate name: Professor Pee-Pee Diarrheastein Poopypants. Try to say that out loud without smiling just a little. A giant toilet tromps around shooting rolls of Charmin and TPs a neighborhood; whoopee cushions and flatulence resound in a windy performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture"; and the seventh planet from the sun is inevitably referenced, as you knew it would be. To the delight of its young audience, juvenile humor abounds in Captain Underpants, but the movie is smart about the way it contextualizes this lowbrow comedy. There's an innocence about it all, a rarity in this genre, one with which adults will nostalgically connect. Ah, to be a kid again and find endless amusement in something as simple as a grouping of consonants and vowels.

and 4-year-old son Andrew (Faulkner) to Paul's safe place: but how safe is it? The family dog goes missing, eerie howls echo throughout the woods, and before long - another nod to Romero – it's family against family against God-knows-what. The devil, or whatever that is outside, is in the details in It Comes at Night. Shults' film, which he also wrote, is a model of nightmare minimalism, trusting the audience to use their imagination to supply their own, patently more terrifying, idea of what the hell is shrieking out there in the forest.

Director of photography Drew Daniels amps up the fear factor by coupling tight close-ups of frightened faces to both tenebrous interiors and the unnaturally distressing light of Coleman lanterns and gasolined gravesites. Infused with a perpetual gloom that renders even the lush, daylight woodland as threatening as Grizzly breath on the back of your neck, Shults' intimate, doom-trippy portrait of two modern American families devolving into primitive tribalism is unnerving and powerful. Got a family? Best prepare yourself for some seriously freaky-ass bad dreams post-screening.

History is not well-served by this film's evocation of Winston Churchill or the planning for D-Day (whose June 6, 1944, anniversary is commemorated by the timing last week of Churchill's release on June 2). Aiming to create a more rounded portrait of Churchill (named the Greatest Briton of all time in a 2002 BBC poll), this film instead diminishes his memory by presenting him as a petulant leader whose battle with depression threatened to impede the Supreme Allied Commander Dwight D. Eisenhower's plans for the D-Day invasion. Moreover, this Churchill presented here is saddled with some hackneyed dialogue, and framed by "great man" cinematography that poses him commandingly in every shot. Fortunately, Brian Cox delivers a bravura performance that keeps things watchable, if not always dramatically truthful.

It's known that Churchill had his misgivings about the wisdom of the D-Day operation, but the film presents his objections as obstreperous and peevish. At one point, he is accused of "amateur theatrics" for his attempt to win his argument. Churchill takes place during the four-day lead-up to the Normandy landing, during which time Churchill argues with the Allied commanders and is only reined in by King George VI (Purefoy), who pays him a personal visit. Miranda Richardson is wasted in the part of Churchill's wife Clementine, who is also shown to exert some influence over her

Anyone coming to the film without prior knowledge of Churchill or the import of the D-Day invasion will find their knowledge little enhanced, although abundant music cues will try to point the way. LAST MEN IN ALEPPO D: Feras Fayyad. (NR, 110 min., subtitled)

Once Syria's largest city, Aleppo is now a place of rubble and desperation as a result of the Syrian Civil War. President Bashar al-Assad's bombing campaign against resistant pockets of his own people destroyed most of the city's structures and killed or maimed those residents who refused to flee or become homeless refugees. By the end of 2016, al-Assad's Russian-assisted forces regained the ancient city from the Aleppo rebels, but The Last Man in Aleppo was shot during the devastating months before that defeat. The White Helmets rescue group (officially the Syria Civil Defence) is the subject of this documentary, their work will be familiar to anyone who has seen Orlando von Einsiedel's 2016 Oscar-winning documentary short, "The White Helmets." The group's primary work is to keep a constant scan of the skies for warplanes. then race to the bombing sites and dig through the rubble to search for survivors. It is heroic, laborious, and heart-wrenching work. So many dead bodies and severed anatomical parts are retrieved along with the barely alive - and so many of the victims are babies and toddlers. Last Men in Aleppo, which won the World Cinema Grand Jury Documentary Prize at the Sundance Film Festival, puts you on the ground in these first responders' boots. The witnessed wreckage will not wash away easily. Nor should it.

The urgency and the desperation demand that attention be paid to this atrocity, as well as the White Helmets' attempts to make life a little better. The film focuses primarily on two rescuers, Khaled and Mahmoud. Khaled is a natural leader and the sweet affection of his three little girls provides the movie's fleeting uplift. He wants to get his children out of Aleppo, but feels that life in a refugee camp would not be a better option. Mahmoud and his brother have not told their parents, who are safe in Turkey, the truth about what they do. They figure their destiny is tied to the siege. Last Men in Aleppo doesn't build in a narrative sense, however. In fact, the greatest takeaway from the film is the repetition: Day after day, the workers comb through rubble with their hands, call out for more body bags, and debate whether to show a severed foot to a family member for identification. The tasks are horrific, and ceaseless, but for one episode in which families are able to gather with their children in a playground for an afternoon of relief. Gallows humor often punctuates the tasks. Overall, the "you are there" footage lends the film a more journalistic than artistic tone, yet the emotional effect is intimate and unforgettably gripping.  – Marjorie Baumgarten AFS CINEMA

MEGAN LEAVEY D: Gabriela Cowperthwaite; with Kate Mara, Ramon Rodriguez, Tom Felton, Bradley Whitford, Common, Edie Falco, Will Patton, Miguel Gomez, Andrew Masset. (PG-13, 116 min.)

Sometimes a dog is a woman's best friend. That's the case with the titular misfit Marine (Mara of The Martian) and Rex, the stubborn but fierce IED-sniffing German shepherd she ends up handling after being booted down to the K-9 unit at USMC Camp Pendleton after a drunken night out with fellow marines.

The French Connection

D: William Friedkin; with Gene Hackman. (1971, R, 104 min.) Summer Film Classics. Hackman stars as Jimmy "Popeye" Doyle, a cop who ruthlessly pursues drug dealers in gritty NYC. The film won five Academy Awards and set a new standard for action with its thrilling car chases. @Paramount, Tuesday, 9:05pm; Thursday (6/15), 7pm.

Grieving for her recently deceased best friend, enduring shrill belittlings from her mother (Falco), missing her estranged father (Patton), trapped in a feloniously generic small town, and generally wallowing in existential depression, you can't fault tomboy Leavey for hopping the next bus to excitement and warfare – how bad can it be?

After a standard training montage that made me pine for Warren Oates' Sgt. Hulka in the 1981 Bill Murray vehicle Stripes, Leavey ships out to "The Shit" - aka 2003 Iraq with Rex in tow where she's assigned to walk ahead of soldiers' Humvees searching for land mines, snipers, and just plain old wartime SNAFUs. It's no spoiler to say she wins the respect of the troops she's guiding, along with the sandpapery admiration of K-9 Master Sgt. Gunny (Common), or that both her and Rex are eventually wounded in battle. But Megan Leavey, the-movie-based-on-real-lifeevents, is a strange combination of The Hurt Locker and Lassie. What's that, Rex? You say little Hadji has fallen down the well and needs his cell phone bomb trigger?! Good boy!

I've always believed that movies depicting warfare should at least attempt to match or best the "war is hell" nightmare scenario of actual combat, but the PG-13 Megan Leavey sidesteps the horrors and ends up being about the lengths to which one person can go to bring about moral justice. Here, that translates to PTSD-suffering Leavey's indefatigable, postwar agitating to adopt her furry, now equally unbalanced, wonder dog by appearing on national news with her story and eventually reaching out to Sen. Chuck Schumer (Masset).

Director Cowperthwaite previously helmed the award-winning Blackfish, yet these two films couldn't be more different in tone and execution. There's something missing here, and it's the glossed-over bonding between dog and handler. There's hardly ever an overt moment where the audience clicks with the unique, near feral solidarity between Rex and Leavey. Smartly shot and edited, with a passable score from Mark Isham, Megan Leavey still falls short of bristling battlefieldand-beyond greatness. This is a film that can't decide if it wants to be a war movie or a rescue dog melodrama and therefore falls into cinematic no-man's/woman's-land. **

Not counting 2004's execrable Van Helsing, this umpteenth iteration of the 1932 Boris Karloff shocker is Universal's initial foray into rebooting their classic movie monsters, now dubbed "Dark Universe." It's big, it's slick, it's very, very Hollywood, but it's just not that good a film. It's not even as much fun – and monster movies, as opposed to horror movies, should be fun – as the 1999 Brendan Fraser vehicle of the same name.

Screenwriters David Koepp, Christopher McQuarrie, and Dylan Kussman bear the brunt of the blame here, chiefly because so many of the set-pieces and sequences have been lifted part and parcel from other, better films. I noted direct lifts from An American Werewolf in London, The Abyss, and, yep, lots of do-overs from that pre-millennial, similarly titled Stephen Sommers flick, among others. Yikes. That's a lot of cribbing, guys. After a lengthy bit of introductory explanation set in ancient Egypt, the film fast-forwards to modern-day Iraq, and American soldiers-cum-looters of antiquity Nick Morton (Cruise, playing against type) and Chris Vail (Johnson). Pinned down by enemy fire in the midst of nowhere, they radio in a hellfire missile strike that ends up blasting the lid off of a gigantic underground tomb. This in turn interests archaeologist Jenny Halsey (Wallis), who has the sarcophagus within shipped to London for study by her boss, Dr. Henry Jekyll (Crowe, seemingly channeling John Goodman). Jekyll's the most interesting character here, seeing as he has to inject himself every hour or so with the serum that keeps his alter-id, the Cockney scalawag Mr. Hyde, in check.

The Mummy's kinda/sorta ace in the hole is the titular creature itself: he's a she. Algerian-born actor Sofia Boutella plays it straight and makes for a fine figure in rotting bandages, literally sucking the life out of every man she meets. The tepid plot has her seeking a ruby-encrusted, all-powerful dagger that can summon Set, the Egyptian god of the dead, but that's not really the focus of the film. Actually, the entire film lacks focus, despite the unsurprising arc of Cruise's character, who transforms from selfish jerk to "a good man" by the time the final credits roll.

But is it worth shelling out $12 to watch this bombastic piece of "classic" cinema mediocrity? That all depends on how many rubies you have in your wallet. As for me, I'll be rewatching the crypt-cold classic Karloff version this evening to wash the digital sand out of my memory.

MY COUSIN RACHEL D: Roger Michell; with Rachel Weisz, Sam Claflin, Iain Glen. (PG-13, 106 min.)

ALIEN: COVENANT

D: Ridley Scott; with Michael Fassbender, Katherine Waterston, Billy Crudup, Danny McBride, Demián Bichir, Carmen Ejogo, Callie Hernandez. (R, 122 min.)

Ridley Scott's 1979 original is a bona fide classic, with James Cameron's 1986 sequel following close behind. But after that, things get a bit dodgy for the franchise, most notably with Scott's 2012's prequel, Prometheus which had a serious lack of xenomorphs. So now it's "Give the people what they want" time, as this film plays like a greatest hits of your favorite Alien moments. After a prologue that seeks to bridge the gap between films, we are swept away into the deep space life of the spaceship Covenant, where married couples are the crew, and the ship houses thousands of souls in hibernation, on their way to a distant, habitable planet to thrive and prosper. The crew provide easy fodder when the xenomorph shows up, while Katherine Waterston runs around trying to figure out what the hell is going on. Rarely do I comment on characters' hairstyles in movies, but the decision to give Waterston a hybrid bowl-cut/ Prince Valiant bob is one of the most ill-advised things this film does. And in a film that treats its audience like morons, that is saying something. (05/19/2017) – Josh Kupecki

Anything featuring Dwayne Johnson seems to be met with a complicit agreement that, while this might not be the best film, maybe you had some chuckles. Those laughs are unfortunately too spread out to recommend this Nineties TV reboot.Let's back up and talk about Mitch Buchannon (Johnson), an ex-Navy SEAL who watches over the beaches with his crew. Enter Matt Brody (Efron, a delight), a former Olympic swimmer who disgraced himself à la Ryan Lochte. Add Alexandra Daddario as Summer Quinn, Kelly Rohrbach as C.J. Parker, and Jon Bass as schlubby newcomer Ronnie. There's a plot somewhere, involving nightclub owner Victoria (Chopra), but mostly the overly long proceedings consist of dick jokes and a constant reminder that this is an ironic take on bygone property. Baywatch resembles a scarce amount of its origin and relies on a none-too-arch humor that misses more than it hits. (05/26/2017)

O BEAUTY AND THE BEAST

D: Bill Condon; with Emma Watson, Dan Stevens, Luke Evans, Josh Gad, Kevin Kline, Emma Thompson, Ewan McGregor, Stanley Tucci, Audra McDonald, Ian McKellen. (PG, 129 min.)

This live-action reboot of Walt Disney Studio's watershed 1991 animated film musical inspires both imagination and cynicism. But beneath the brilliance of its execution, a certain familiarity breeds contempt. Despite the updating of certain elements of the Disneyfied adaptation of the classic story, which now features a gay supporting character and a much darker third act, this is pretty much the same movie released by the same studio just a little more than a quarter of a century ago. The movie largely succeeds due to the guiding talent of director Bill Condon. As in the 1991 film, the centerpiece number here is "Be Our Guest," a razzledazzler that pops off the screen. As for the titular romantic leads, both Watson and Stevens manage to make the roles their own. Without question, kids and their adults will love this critic-proof movie, regardless of the number of times they've already seen it before. (03/24/2017) 1

THE BOSS BABY

Imagine Gordon Gecko merging with toddler Stewie Griffin and you have The Boss Baby. This retro-vibed DreamWorks feature about a 7-year-old boy named Tim. grappling with the unwelcome arrival of a baby brother. is like so many other high-concept, computer-animated comedies these days: clever and funny, but lacking in an emotionally accessible storyline. The film takes a tummytickling concept - the literal infantilization of selfish and demanding adult behavior - and attaches fantastic plot threads until its satiric edge is dulled by 10-gagsa-minute pacing and goo-goo-gaga gooeyness. At first, you're led to think that the film's downsized tyke-in-chief may be the product of Tim's overactive imagination. Maybe the far-fetched narrative is something playing out inside the young boy's head as he attempts to cope with his new brother, similar to the pre-adolescent internalizations of The LEGO Movie and Inside Out. But no: it's all literal. Without something substantial to hold on to, the movie's chubby little fingers lose their grip on the possibility of something to remember after the credits roll. THE CIRCLE

D: James Ponsoldt; with Emma Watson, Tom Hanks, John Boyega, Bill Paxton, Karen Gillan, Beck, Nate Corddry. (PG-13, 110 min.)

Based on the 2013 novel by Generation X-er Dave Eggers, The Circle features Watson as Mae Holland, an ambitious but none-too-bright twentysomething who quickly rises up in the ranks of the titular high-tech company cofounded by Eamon Bailey (Hanks), a zillionaire visionary who communicates his down-to-earth accessibility by wearing tennis shoes and carrying a coffee cup everywhere he goes. Eradicating the boundaries of personal privacy in the guise of social justice, public accountability, and other warm-andfuzzy buzzwords, the Circle turns out to be a nefarious organization seemingly intent on world domination, brainwashing its employees to drink the corporate Kool-Aid like members of a cyber-cult. This might have worked as a digital-age social satire, but instead, the film opts for paranoia on par with forgetting your password, never mining the depth of the real Big Brother fears underlying our interconnected existence. Like that endlessly spinning disc signifying a problem with your computer, The Circle goes around and around and around without taking you anywhere except to a place of pointed frustration. COLOSSAL

If William S. Burroughs had made a sci-fi rom-com it might have looked something like this, and that's very high praise indeed. Anne Hathaway plays the alcohol-besotted Gloria, who's kicked out of her boyfriend's Manhattan apartment after one blackout too many. Nonplussed, she returns to the small town where she grew up, where she meets childhood bestie Oscar, now the owner of the local watering hole. What better place for a not-recovering alcoholic to get a waitressing job? The pair more or less continue drinking the town dry even as a gigantic, Godzilla-esque kaiju starts stomping the bejesus out of Seoul at the exact same time every morning. Chaos of every stripe follows, and slowly but surely you realize director Nacho Vigalondo has made a snarly, bizarro-world female empowerment film that takes itself and its characters very seriously. Who would have thought Anne Hathaway plus giant-ass monsters plus booze would result in such a smart, genre-defying, femme selfactualization manifesto? (04/14/2017)

DIARY OF A WIMPY KID: THE LONG HAUL

D: David Bowers; with Jason Drucker, Alicia Silverstone, Tom Everett Scott, Charlie Wright, Chris Coppola. (PG, 90 min.)

In this fourth onscreen installment of the Diary of a Wimpy Kid series, a newly minted Jason Drucker assumes the titular role of the perennially put-upon middle-schooler, Greg Heffley, presumably because Zachary Gordon, who originated the character back in 2010, turned the corner of puberty long ago. The new movie features an entirely refurbished Heffley family set off on an eventful four-day road trip through middle America to attend Meemaw's 90th birthday party. Along the way, diapers cling, pigs crap, ducks attack, vomit spews, mud splatters, dough explodes, and embarrassing video clips go viral, further sharpening the slings and arrows of outrageous pre-adolescence for miserable Greg. What's missing here? The satirically edged animated illustrations by series creator Jeff Kinney, which would have made this Wimpy Kid less cartoonish, ironically enough. No doubt, the under-10 crowd will love this bathroom vulgarity: As every kid (wimpy or not) knows, there's nothing funnier on this planet than the plop of poop - except for maybe a loud, rumbling, wet fart. EVERYTHING, EVERYTHING D: Stella Meghie; with Amandla Stenberg, Nick Robinson, Anika

Noni Rose, Ana de la Reguera, Taylor Hickson, Danube Hermosillo. (PG-13, 96 min.)

Based on the YA novel by Nicola Yoon, this is an aboveaverage, young love weeper that somehow manages to hit all the genre notes in formal succession - vawn - but holds your interest by the remarkably nuanced performances of leads Stenberg and Robinson. She's 18-year-old Maddy who, as is explained in both voiceover and animation, suffers from a rare autoimmune disorder that has kept her from leaving her mother's airlocked, spick-and-span Los Angeles home for as long as she can remember. When hunky, black-clad brooder Olly (Robinson) and his family move in next door, Maddy spies him from her bedroom window, they lock eyes as he skateboards by with a tentative wave, and the race to true teen love is off and running. As YA adaptations go, this isn't quite The Notebook, but its core demographic of teen girls will likely be more than satisfied. (05/19/2017)1

O THE FATE OF THE FURIOUS

Interestingly, with this new addition to the F&F franchise the filmmakers have adapted to the loss of Paul Walker by fattening the roster of supporting players and pulling focus from star Vin Diesel. That's a boon for anyone who's grown weary of his character, gruff Dom Toretto, who uncharacteristically breaks from the crew early on to forge his own path. Dwayne Johnson's Agent Hobbs ain't having that, and so convenes a supergroup of old and new to chase Dom down. With every picture the series has grown ever more preposterous, its sense of humor improving in tempo with its silliness. Nothing here quite matches the thrilling audacity of Furious 7, but just as I'd started to fear the worst for Fate of the Furious, there's a sequence involving self-driving cars that sent a bolt through my heart best described as uncomplicated joy. Sneer all you want at the so-called low culture of F&F, but never underestimate the pure pleasure of watching grownups play smash 'em up with life-sized Hot Wheels. GIFTED

D: Marc Webb; with Chris Evans, Mckenna Grace, Lindsay Duncan, Octavia Spencer, Jenny Slate, Michael Kendall Kaplan, John M. Jackson, Glenn Plummer. (PG-13, 101 min.)

Captain America's Chris Evans drops the red, white, and blue here for a totally different type of shield, that of compassionate father figure and guardian Frank to his 7-year-old niece Mary. He's a Florida backwater boat monkey and she's a child prodigy who'd probably ace Will Hunting in any mathletic competition. Frank's determined that the li'l Einstein acquire some social skills and enrolls her in the local elementary school, where the kindly schoolmarm susses out that Mary's a bona fide, pint-sized genius, and approaches Frank about enrolling her in a gifted and talented school. He believes that'll sell the kid short in the emotional long run and so declines. Enter Mary's British grandmother, who's determined not to let the child's gifts go to waste, and so launches a custody battle with venom straight out of Kramer vs. Kramer. Despite its treacle-begging storyline, this is a charming, deeply human film with heart to spare and several outstanding performances. (04/14/2017) 1

The details of this remake of a 1979 heist caper are much less interesting than watching three consummate actors bouncing off one another and delighting in the interplay. Go for the actors, stay for the popcorn and the sight of Michael Caine, Morgan Freeman, and Alan Arkin allowed free range to do their thing. The three men play retirees living in Brooklyn, whose dull daily routines are upturned when the steel plant they worked for reneges on their pensions. Adding insult to injury, the community bank that refuses them personal loans is the same firm that's overseeing the plant's divestiture. A plot to rob the bank is soon hatched and the bulk of the film is devoted to the planning and execution of the caper. It's nothing terribly original, and a lot of the geezer humour falls flat. It is nice, though, to see movie stars acting their age for a change. (04/07/2017) ***

GUARDIANS OF THE GALAXY VOL. 2

Everybody's got family issues galore in this slightly less invigorating but still welcome sequel to director James Gunn's 2014 surprise Marvel Universe hit. Set against a somewhat rambling plot involving the theft of some ultrapowerful Doomacell batteries from a golden-skinned race of interstellar perfectionists led by Debicki's Ayesha, these familial conflicts give Vol. 2 a more serious tone than the first film. Which isn't to say that it's any less entertaining. Director and writer Gunn is a dab hand with space opera quippery and most of the set-pieces land bang on target, with collateral emotional damage to boot. It's got more heft, and the risks are higher this time around, but this is one Marvel Extended Universe tentpole that is unlikely to be crushed beneath the earth-shattering seriousness of Cap vs. Tony Stark. It's far too gleefully goofy for that, even with the death of a major character in this entry. Plus, Baby Groot (voiced by Vin Diesel) is just too goddamn cute. All in all, it's a helluva fun ride and the platonic ideal of a Saturday afternoon matinee. (05/12/2017)

HOW TO BE A LATIN LOVER

How to Be a Latin Lover is a study in contrasts: It's both sentimental and funny. The film tells the story of Maximo (Derbez) and how he has fulfilled his childhood desire of living the good life as a paid gigolo. Maximo's constant prowl for rich old women provides juicy roles for actresses we haven't seen much of in the movies of late: Renée Taylor, Linda Lavin, and Raquel Welch (and anyone who recalls Welch's guest appearance on an episode of Seinfeld, in which her arm-swinging becomes a central plot point, will find extra resonance in her character's comic twist here). Maximo's fellow tribe of gigolos is played with great cynicism by Rob Lowe and Michael Cera. Ken Marino is the prefect ringleader for this film, given his penchant for awkward humor. How to Be a Latin Lover is rude, randy, and heartwarmingly cute. As one of the gigolos says, "Once you lower your expectations, the sky's the limit." (05/05/2017)  - Marjorie Baumgarten

Ever feel like bureaucracies intentionally thwart people from obtaining the very services they were designed to provide? If you can relate to such circumstances, I, Daniel Blake, winner of Cannes' 2016 Palme d'Or, will speak to you. For director Ken Loach and his longtime screenwriting collaborator Paul Laverty, I, Daniel Blake represents their most accessible film ever, a story of two Briton souls who've become victims of the very social services that were meant to sustain them. Daniel Blake (Johns) is a woodworker in his late 50s on medical leave from his job due to a heart condition, and Katie Morgan (Squires) is a mother of two who has been moved by a government agency to a shabby apartment in Newcastle. Daniel befriends Katie, and the film proceeds to detail their connected plights as Daniel is forced to apply for jobs while waiting for a doctor's okay to return to work, while Katie forgoes meals and shoplifts to support her children. It's emotionally involving and gut-wrenching throughout, and I guarantee that the next time you're on hold with a government agency, you'll have visions in your head of Daniel and Katie dancing desperately to the Muzak. THE LOST CITY OF Z

The burden of dreams can drive a sane man mad, but in the meandering historical drama The Lost City of Z, the lofty vision of 20th century British cartographer and explorer Colonel Percival Fawcett simply feels like something inconveniently just out of reach. Lacking any true inspirational dimension, the film's depiction of Fawcett's lifelong search for proof of an ancient lost civilization hidden in the uncharted jungles of Bolivia seldom rises to anything above a historical footnote here. Metaphorically speaking, the oddly enervated The Lost City of Z is a journey without a destination, much like modern-day conquistador Fawcett's futile quest for an extraordinary place that may ultimately only exist within the four corners of his mind. Its heart of darkness palpitates with the beat of the mundane rather than anything tragic, although its central character's delusions occasionally elicit a sigh, if only out of pity. Like the Amazon, the movie feels as if it goes on forever. (04/21/2017)

All vestiges of the pretty-boy veneer that have often overshadowed the fine performances that Richard Gere has delivered are finally shattered with his work in Norman: The Moderate Rise and Tragic Fall of a New York Fixer. In many ways, Norman is a stereotype of a pushy Jew, using vague connections to get his foot in the door. Just when we're about to give up on him, we witness a big payoff. AFS CELEBRATES JOHN PIERSON'S SEMINAL IFC SHOW

With its heavy emphasis on comedies like Portlandia, Documentary Now!, and Stan Against Evil, younger viewers might be surprised that the F in IFC stands for film. But when the Independent Film Channel first started broadcasting in 1994, that was all it did. These days, the cinematic side is admirably handled by its theatrical distribution wing IFC (currently promoting Ken Loach's I, Daniel Blake) and its horror sub-shingle IFC Sest of Split Screen With John Pierson Midnight, the IFC cable chan-@AFS Cinema, Sunday, 5pm. nel has a heavier emphasis on episodic broadcasting.

But in 1997, it was Split Screen, the movie magazine show by producer John Pierson (a key figure in the early success of Michael Moore's Roger & Me, Kevin Smith's Clerks, and The Blair Witch Project) and future SXSW director Janet Pierson, that melded the two strands. Retrieved from the vaults late last year by FilmStruck through their Criterion Channel, Sunday sees a rare screening at the AFS Cinema of four episodes, plus a reunion for some of the series creators and subjects.

For four years, the series was ground zero for the indie film explosion of the late Nineties and early Aughts. Episode 1 opened with John – shaggy hair, big, round glasses – anagy rail, big, round glasses – hanging out with Spike Lee in front of the old Bleecker Street Cinema, talking about changing the sign on the front and hunting mice in the back. It was the TV spin-off of Pierson's book Spike, Mike, Slackers & Dykes: A Guided Tour Across a Decade of American Independent Cinema, allowing him and his cohorts and collaborators to further champion the indie scene. Not just talking about the creative successes but, as Pierson described it in the opening monologue, "warts and all, the art, the heart, and the enterprise of the American independent film."

Part of Split Screen's mission was to highlight cinema away from the big NYC/L.A. studio production hubs, and this weekend's selection dives straight into Austin's part of that legacy with Kyle Henry (Room, the upcoming Rogers Park), Elisabeth Sikes ("Weekend With Larry") and Bob Ray (Hell on Wheels) reminiscing with John about the episode from SXSW 1998. Janet Pierson will screen her examination of Vermont-based artist and filmmaker Miranda July (Me and You and Everyone We Know), plus filmmaker Bill Daniel (episode 19, "Selective Service System Story") and cowboy-turned-actor Barry Tubb (episode 17, "Lonesome Blood Trail") will attend to show and tell their stories. - Richard Whittaker

D: Eleanor Coppola; with Diane Lane, Arnaud Viard, Alec Baldwin, Élodie Navarre, Elise Tielrooy, Cédric Monnet. (PG, 92 min.)

The lovely Diane Lane spends most of her time avoiding the lips of a charming French man as they languidly eat their way from Provence to Burgundy in the slight Paris Can Wait. It's evident why this Gallic male so ardently pursues her: Diane is as fetching as ever. Which is a good thing, since that's all that's asked of her in this first narrative feature written and directed by Eleanor Coppola (spouse of Francis Ford). As the taken-for-granted wife of a famous film producer with a history of infidelity, Lane effortlessly pulls you into the movie right away. But then there's nowhere to go, as her character Anne spends the film either snapping photos with her camera, or dodging the silky charms of her husband's business partner (Viard) on a road trip triggered by the clunky plot device of an earache. The movie can be summed up in a simple question: Will she or won't she? But even that angle doesn't make the movie terribly appetizing. What it needs is a little salt. (06/02/2017)

PIRATES OF THE CARIBBEAN: DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Beware the summer season tentpole franchise that purloins its opening action sequence from a one-off gag in Carl Reiner's The Jerk and then drags it on for 15 minutes. So it goes with this fifth and - if the cinema seas be sane final entry into Disney's Pirates series.Gore Verbinski's 2003 original, The Curse of the Black Pearl, was a swashbuckling, wonderful goof, with Depp as the ocean's most disreputable (and inebriated) skull-and-boner. The joke has worn thin in the intervening 14 years, and this incomprehensible odyssey to find Poseidon's mythical trident and break "all the curses of the sea" is little more than a hodgepodge of poorly penned quivery. Even Bardem, as the captain of a Spanish warship who was lured to his undead doom by Sparrow. can't salvage this wreck. This ship has sailed, sank, and not to put too fine a bowsprit on it, sucks. A QUIET PASSION

D: Terence Davies; with Cynthia Nixon, Jennifer Ehle, Duncan Duff, Keith Carradine, Emma Bell, Jodhi May, Joanna Bacon, Catherine Bailey, (PG-13, 125 min.)

Was Emily Dickinson's home life - to which the poet restricted herself in the last years of her life - a comfort or a curse? Davies, the director of such literary adaptations as Sunset Song, The Deep Blue Sea, and The House of Mirth, continues to feel right at home with the period piece (although this era is especially severe - in clothing and hair, the limits to what women can do, the amount of discussion over the soul's chances at eternal damnation), and with gifting a great role to an actress. Emily is played as an adult by the perfectly cast Cynthia Nixon; her journey from feistiness to embitterment is uneasy to watch, and her end-of-life seizures downright gruesome. A Quiet Passion's manneredness is overwhelming at times, but it is very effective - chilling, even - in its charting of one woman's disappointed journey to the rhetorical coda of her own life: "Why has the world become so ugly?" SMURFS: THE LOST VILLAGE

A strictly-for-the-kiddies animated reboot of the seemingly ancient Smurf brand, The Lost Village is so tame it hardly merits a PG rating. Whereas most kids' movies tend to throw mom and dad a bone in the form of a topical gag or a sly pop-culture joke, this is unadulterated pre-teen schlock. It's also hamstrung by a confusing moral center that finds Smurfette, the Smurfiverse's token female, setting out on a quest to discover her purpose in life. Of course. Smurfette isn't a Smurf at all, but a golem created by the evil wizard Gargamel to destroy Papa Smurf's patriarchal society. With the passing of time and merchandise, however, she became part of the all-male Smurf coterie. Now our purposeless protagonist has to track down a mysterious being she briefly glimpsed in the Forbidden Forest. Determinedly setting out on her own, she evades Gargamel's clutches and ventures off into unknown territory with predictable results. This is sham feminism, as well as dreadful filmmaking. O THEIR FINEST

Employing a comfortable blend of drama and comedy, Their Finest also functions as a period piece set during the London Blitz of 1940, a behind-the-scenes movie about the making of movies, and a female-empowerment story about women in the commercial workplace while male employees were off fighting World War II. An engaging panoply of characters populates the film, but its central character is Catrin Cole, a copywriter who reports for a job at England's Ministry of Information, only to discover the job is to write "slop" (the dismissive term for women's dialogue) for public-service propaganda films. Catrin learns the ropes of screenwriting from Tom Buckley, while dealing with her husband Ellis (a painter of bleak cityscapes deemed too depressing for exhibition) at home. A restrained romantic triangle plays out over the course of the film. Their Finest features a medley of actors, but they all perform, and director Lone Scherfig keeps the plates spinning with seeming ease. (04/14/2017)- Mariorie Baumgarten

THE WEDDING PLAN

ARBOR

The Wedding Plan isn't a romantic comedy in the familiar screwball tradition. In fact, what makes this Israeli film so intriguing is its absence of tradition. As in her previous film, 2012's Fill the Void, writer/director Rama Burshtein opens up a vantage point on marriage. romance, and religion as seen from the perspective of a modern Orthodox Jewish woman. At 32, Michal (Noa Koler) is feeling a bit desperate when the man to whom she is engaged dumps her a month before their planned wedding. Deciding to put her faith in God, Michal holds on to her previously planned wedding date. She goes out on more dates, continues to work as the proprietor of a mobile petting zoo, and goes on a pilgrimage where she meets Yos (Israeli heartthrob Oz Zehavi), a handsome but nonreligious musician who finds her appealing. The Wedding Plan will be no one's idea of a Western rom-com starring a sexy Hollywood ingenue, but for those who are inclined, it will be a ringing endorsement of the belief that God, indeed, works in mysterious ways. WONDER WOMAN

This, uh, wonderfully directed and near-perfectly cast iconic heroine female empowerment story is so similar in tone and feel to Marvel Studios' Captain America that I was waiting for Stan Lee to show up. But, no, this is a big girl's game all the way, replete with Greek mythos and an exhilarating performance from Israeli actor Gal Gadot as Diana, Princess of Themyscira (aka Wonder Woman, although no one says it aloud), the bullet-deflecting, Lasso of Truth-whipping, not-entirely-American - yet utterly feminist - heroine. Created by Zeus to defend humankind from Aries, the God of War (a startling Thewlis), Diana is Amazon royalty. When Yank spy/pilot Steve Trevor (Pine, riffing on his Captain Kirk character perhaps a tad too much) is shot down over the hidden island chain of Themyscira while being pursued by vengeful Germans, she's honor-bound to defend a world of men she does not yet fully comprehend. The various heroes band together to defeat not only Kaiser Wilhelm et cetera, but also the hidden lust for death and mayhem that, as Diana learns, is part and parcel of every human being. D: Makoto Shinkai; with the voices of Ryûnosuke Kamiki, Mone Kamishiraishi, Ryô Narita, Aoi Yuki, Masami Nagasawa, Etsuko Ichihara, Kanon Tani, Nobunaga Shimazaki, Masaki Terasoma. (PG, 106 min., subtitled)

A bored school girl stuck in a rural village, Mitsuha wishes she were living a more cosmopolitan life, while the similarly aged Taki lives in the shimmering metropolis of Japan's capital without any singular purpose. The two adolescents seemingly know nothing of the other's existence, but one morning each wakes up in the other's body and lives out the day in a confused state, only to awaken the next day with the vague memory of an unsettling dream about a girl, or a boy, who lives in a faraway place. This Japanese anime romance - the fourth-highest grossing film in the country's history - uses the body-swap motif, familiar from countless U.S comedies. Unlike Freaky Friday, however, Your Name has a twist that gives it a stunning emotional impact. The film requires a degree of patience, given its nonlinear structure, but once you place your faith in screenwriter/director Makoto Shinkai's expert hands, the reward will come. He has made the most emotionally compelling animation since Inside Out. (04/07/2017) * - Steve Davis ALAMO S. LAMAR

"Hastily Prepared" Ordinances Head to City Council

Music advocates are imploring city staff to pump the brakes on venue-related legislation. On Friday, the Economic Development Department (EDD) revealed its re-draft on Agent of Change and Outdoor Music Venue (OMV) permits, the latter blindsiding local venue stakeholders with a significant rewrite of city code regarding sound. As of this week, both policy proposals are scheduled to go to City Council Thursday, June 15.

For his part, Bobby Garza, chair of Austin Music People, sent a trenchant missive to Austin's Music Commission on Monday requesting a resolution that Council postpone the "hastily prepared" policy.

"The proposed ordinance is not only about [Agent of Change and the OMV license], but a complete repeal and rewrite of the Sound Ordinance in Chapter 9-2," wrote Garza.

"There are numerous systemic issues with this approach, the most striking of which is bifurcating the Sound Ordinance into two separate places in code and potentially creating more confusion."

Garza characterized rewriting the venuerelated code without adequate vetting as "dangerous," adding that the Sound Ordinance "underpins the absolute health of the entire music ecosystem."

This do-over legislation comes one month after the EDD unveiled a policy draft that was largely rejected by the music community and less than one week after Mayor Adler united club operators, EDD staff, and music advocates for policy discussions. One attendee, Empire Control Room & Garage owner Steve Sternschein, is disappointed by the subsequent re-draft.

"The changes have actually made it worse. They've snuck C-weighting - basically bass vibrations - into the code." specifies Sternschein, referring to dBc measurements moving from a club's sound impact plan to a permit-impacting regulation. "With subtle language, they're setting music venues up for increased regulation, to our detriment."

Meanwhile, Agent of Change – a proposal to improve compatibility between venues and developments – now includes hotels, but Sternschein decries the proposal's lack of building standards in terms of soundproofing for new developments near music venues, as well as the statute's hinging on clubs having OMV permits.

"Agent of Change should be a land-use principle that has to do with entitlements and property ownership," he says. "Why would we tie that to a short-term permit when there's already a very comprehensive list of permitted uses based on zoning?"

Sternschein calls the legislation "a huge setback" and believes the vote needs to be postponed in order for language to be worked out amongst stakeholders including venue operators and neighborhoods. Indeed, come next Thursday, he and other live music businesses may be lobbying Council to reject the two measures should their wording remain the same. Mary Ingle, head of Austin Neighborhoods Council – a body often in opposition to general club interests - said ANC has no official comment, but spoke on the record about the measures.

"This is not ready for prime time," stated Ingle, adding that neighborhood and music groups should work together over the summer on policy that everyone likes. "We're really not that far apart."

Meanwhile, the Music Commission, which mystifyingly sanctioned the widely panned first policy draft, didn't endorse the revisions on Monday, but also couldn't muster a vote recommending postponement, despite urging from AMP and Austin's Music Venue Alliance.

THREADGILL'S WORLD HEADQUARTERS SAVED!

Long before vuppies employed "SoCo" and "SoFi" to describe two South Austin thoroughfares, Eddie Wilson pitched his tent betwixt the two. His Armadillo World Headquarters cross-pollinated local music culture there at the corner of Barton Springs Road, 1970-80. Threadgill's World Headquarters, Wilson's continuation of the joint his mentor Kenneth Threadgill lit in 1933 up on North Lamar (Old No. 1), has occupied its nearby spot on West Riverside since the following year.

Problem is, in today's cap city land gold rush, the post-hippie, comfort-food-'n'-music establishment's continued existence amongst some of Austin's prime real estate remains increasingly implausible.

"Three years, maybe six," estimated Wilson in 2014 of how long before a high-rise took his HO spot.

Now, he reports a deal that will keep the Downtown landmark going for four more years.

"I'd been worried about the lease," admits Wilson, "but now Mr. [Moton] Crockett, my landlord, is the sole entity that I have to deal with, and he seems to really want me there. If someone comes in with a [viable] idea for that property, I'll have a chance to pitch making Threadgill's part of it!"

BLUEGRASS BUDDHIST PETER ROWAN, who played with Bill Monroe, wrote "Panama Red," and performs annually at Old Settler's, sold his house in Blanco where he's lived for 25 years and moved to Marin, Calif. Rowan told the Marin last week that the cable station formerly known as Time Warner

the Hill Country, it's become too crowded.

Crockett, whose family owns a dozen acres on the south shore of Lady Bird Lake, was the UT Longhorn Band director in the Fifties when he bought a massive drum for $1 in Indiana and hauled it back to Austin. It became the iconic football stadium staple "Big Bertha." He's now in his mid-90s and, according to Wilson, in "mighty good health."

Wilson's lease concerns subside simultaneous with Threadgill's getting a transfusion of new blood. White Horse and Hard Luck Lounge co-owner Denis O'Donnell - something of a new-generation Eddie Wilson in terms of homegrown impact and personality became an adviser for Threadgill's earlier this year. O'Donnell balanced the restaurant's redtinged books out of respect and reverence for Eddie and his wife Sandra Wilson.

"Denis and I got along right off the bat," enthuses Wilson. "He's made several [pivotal] suggestions, born of long experience in the food business more so than even his bar experience, and some of those suggestions are kind of embarrassing. Not only have I never said I was smart, but even less am I educated in the business I'm in."

Onetime Hole in the Wall GM, O'Donnell is also revitalizing music at the Downtown Threadgill's.

He's installed scene veteran Paul Minor, musical architect of the immensely popular ABGB, as booker; Samantha Carey, a fixture at White Horse, Stay Gold, and the Hole in the Wall, now handles marketing; and Sailor Poon siren Billie Buck, who won Best Poster Artist in the 2016 Austin Music Poll, follows in the footsteps of her 'Dillo hero Jim Franklin as visuals generator.

"Their challenge for music and marketing is to get everybody who's new to Austin to understand Threadgill's history and know what it's doing now," offers O'Donnell. "That's going to take a mix of doing what they've always done right as far as the booking goes, then expanding the programming earlier into the week and taking risks on younger bands."

South Austin MC Sertified arrives at a crossroads

BY KAHRON SPEARMAN

Zero qualms offered and giving no quarter, 28-year-old John David Flores Jr., who does business as upstart powerhouse rapper Sertified, is coming for you. For everyone. And everything.

On the wavy "Make Money," first track off last month's authentic, trap-drenched See Ya Soon, the South Austin native threatens with trademark nasal authoritativeness, "If I ever go broke, I'ma take your money." Then you rendezvous with him and realize that in his case "G" stands for "genuine." That's what all the locals say about "J.D."

"J.D.'s just a real good dude," nods rapper/friend/Die Slo collective member Chamothy Holmes. "He just wants to see everyone around him straight. Just good vibes, man."

ATX hip-hop infrastructuralist Matt Sonzala joins the chorus.

"He's the most supportive person in the scene, staying behind all the rappers," he says. "He doesn't talk shit ever, and he's positive. He's the definition of real Austin hip-hop."

Makes sense. Flores began rapping at 4 when his mother, Priscilla Villegas, wrote his first verses for him. CEO of Power House Media, a former rapper, and decades-long industry veteran, Villegas is her son's first and biggest fan, but she's not even leading the local outpouring of support.

Sitting in South First restaurant staple Little Mexico with his manager Levar Miller in tow, Flores himself appears completely at ease. A dynamic, heavyset Latino rapper, "Texas' Big Pun" remains the laziest analogue one could generate on the MC's behalf. Additionally, his piercing rap shrill, which he initially hated, sounds like legendary Cypress Hill rapper B-Real.

And yet, an entirely different off-wax persona emerges when taking audience with JDFJ, providing a messy and best comparison: coke rap veteran Pusha T. Like King Push, Flores, a polished speaker of subtle effervescence, enjoys his life's journey and its fruits. Also like the Virginia native, something simmers below the surface. It's not necessarily violence, but as a man of many personal trials, Flores and his tremendous ear for beats have been tamed by unspoken darkness.

"We all have the same weapons," he theorizes. "Some may have different talent [levels], but we all have a voice. I'm using mine effectively. It was never really my [starting] point. I was rapping and having fun in the first place, but I've come to terms that my voice is a weapon – knowing how to use it in this day and age."

Flores doesn't hide his past "crazy lifestyle" or participation in street life vices. Those experiences ride shotgun over 808-driven bars. He found his way out of a potentially life-derailing drug charge with a renewed outlook on life and hip-hop.

"That initially kick-started me to really take rap seriously, and really put my foot down and be like, 'Okay, move all my time out the way for this [career],'" he admits. "Before, I would be running around, still in the streets."

He's still in transition, as a matter of fact.

"Not that I ... I mean, I still do run around," he acknowledges. "I have fun and shit, but more so I didn't care about anything else than that day to day. As each day was coming, I was worried about that day. Now, it's more so thinking about the future, taking care of, and handling my business."

Sertified's story also unveils the next chapter in Austin's unusual relationship with hip-hop. He's unwittingly become the latest test case. There's the decades-old open question in this growing metropolis ripe with renowned festivals and the biggest hip-hop roadshows: Why has no Austin-based rapper broken into the mainstream?

Haris Qureshi, who produced Sertified's excellent and diverse 2016 effort Chips and Salsa: The Side Order, offers a generational perspective.

"A lot of guys became promoters because the payout is nearly constant, as opposed to doing a [Houston-based] J. Prince/Rap-A-Lot thing," he explains. "That never happened in Austin, because everyone with drug money was trying to throw shows, instead of having a label."

Asked what qualifies success, Flores allows his manager to intercede.

"It all depends on what your version of making it is," explains Miller. "I mean, if he's got 10,000 loyal fans, or like 1,000 loyal fans that spend $100 a year with him, that could be a substantial amount of money."

Without giving away any industrial secrets, Miller insists there are obvious, homegrown plays rap acts have failed to invoke.

"There are people in Austin willing to give you money to be a part of what you've got going on, but people don't even reach out to them," he shrugs.

Even with new avenues for cash flow, "handling business" as an Austin rapper in 2017 means potentially leaving Austin – via extensive touring or an outright move. Which leads to a crossroads where Flores must make important life decisions. He recently concluded a short regional tour and knows all too well it better prompt more extensive follow-ups.

"It takes footwork and getting out of your comfort zone, moving around," chimes in his mother.

Matt Sonzala is even more blunt.

"Texas' Big Pun" remains

the laziest analogue

one could generate on the

MC's behalf. Additionally,

his piercing rap shrill

sounds like legendary

Cypress Hill rapper B-Real.

"I really can't even talk to these rappers who don't tour at all, who don't go to Houston or Dallas or San Antonio," he says, pointedly. "There's nothing else to say if you can't at least work your region. All these guys, Wiz Khalifa, J. Cole, you heard of them because they toured. If you don't touch people, you're not going to stand out.

"He's not making money on these first tours, but nobody makes money their first tours. You just have to get out there, and he's trying."

Whether charged by the monstrous industry machine or not, many artists' careers have necessitated leaving friendly confines for advancement. Some of Flores' compatriots, including rapper/producer talents Randell "Kydd" Jones and aforementioned crewmate Holmes, relocated to Atlanta, though Jones recently resettled in Austin. Rapper/songwriter Y2 is now based in Los Angeles.

> "Leaving is a big part of it," says Flores. "You have to staple yourself somewhere else, too, and prove to yourself that you can do it. Not to say that it can't be done from here. It is happening, but it's taking longer than people expect."

> Unique to Sertified is the fact that he doesn't flow specific to Texas or his ethnic background. He eschews any "Latino rapper" tag in favor of a universal tack. Nevertheless, Flores' inherent star quality, live wire show, and turnkey style will enable him to relocate anywhere in the country if he chooses to make a go of it.

"Right, I know," says Mom. "What's really holding him here is, 'Grandma's here, grandma's old,' and that's where he's getting a little bit stuck."

She adds that he has two much younger sisters he adores. "That's really what pushes on the inside," he offers. "I don't talk about that at all, but it is what it is, and that's really a big part of what's going on with me. [They drive] me to want to continue, along with the influence I know I have on them. I have to show them that you run after your dreams."

BRUCE ROBISON & THE BACK PORCH BAND (Motel Time Music)

Bruce Robison hasn't released a solo album in almost a decade, but not for lack of productivity. In that time, the local songwriter who authored top country hits "Travelin' Solider" (Dixie Chicks), "Angry All the Time" (Tim McGraw & Faith Hill), and "Wrapped" (George Strait), delivered two excellent duet LPs with wife Kelly Willis and debuted web series The Next Waltz from his studio outside Lockhart. Credit the success of both endeavors with the laid-back, Southwestern ease of the expertly branded Back Porch Band, because Robison has rarely sounded this natural and comfortable. The eponymous effort largely alternates between rowdy honky-tonkers ("Rock & Roll Honky Tonk Ramblin' Man") and beautifully crafted ballads ("Long Time Comin'"), both approaches relaxed yet striking as nestled into the completely analog production. The best takes aren't actually the songwriter's own, but rather his pairing with Jack Ingram for an uptempo roll through Jason Eady and Micky Braun's "Paid My Dues" and lacing Austin songstress Christy Hays' "Lake of Fire" with highway-lonesome fiddle and steel. Although the Who's "Squeezebox" as a roadhouse stomper doesn't add much to the whole, it fits with the informal feel of the project, especially when followed by a tender turn through Damon Bramblett's wistful waltz

ELIOT LIPP skywave (Young Heavy Souls)

Prolific Austin producer Eliot Lipp scales up the melody, rays, and artistic passive-aggressiveness on Skywave, a short, summery project suffering from meandering tendencies. "Sun Comes Out" rings bright, an Eighties-leaning industrial-lite track with subtle funk percussion and retrofuturistic keys, but poolside jam "Tides" washes up undercooked. Revisiting his 2016 album Come to Life, there's a newer, less rhythmic version of "Not Quite Awake," now a reflective, string-filled remix by producer Emancipator, Finally, "Spiders" and "Advance" move the proiect downstream into murkier waters, increasingly disoriented and aggressive in execution and tone, while "Rise Fall Rise" leaves you wanting more at the finish, wishing its declarative and concussive jungle/drum and bass sections - or at least the assertive energy generated by them - had occurred much earlier, and more often.

LEATHER GIRLS (Yippee Ki Yay)

Thirteen tracks of garage rock can get old fast, but Leather Girls work all the angles. On the Austin quartet's self-titled debut, the band's mastery of skuzz guitar powers everything in its wake with an unprecedented vigor. "Sweet Lenore" and "LRS" both evoke contemporaries Thee Oh Sees and Ty Segall, and honeyed paean "Dear Deborah" echoes the Yardbirds. "Arabian Daze" and "She" muscle stop-and-start propulsion and climbing guitar lines, reiterating that Dillon Fernandez's walloping drums and Mike Garrido's six-string rip highlight Leather Girls' live sets and prove equally rollicking here. Guitarist Erik Camacho handles most vocals with his distorted, bluesy bark, but bassist Deborah White takes the lead on a few, including the sinister "Jeff" (as in Dahmer) and a noir cover of the Starfires' "I Never Loved Her." Most narratives get buried in hazy chaos, but the album's strength pulls from the cohesion of its adrenaline-fueled sonics.

THE JOHN-PAULS Forget to Remember to Forget (Aagoo)

Cerebral, cleverly crafted, Forget to Remember to Forget is told from the point of view of male/ female narrators who can't turn off their brains to the tiny terrors of everyday life. Repeatedly mesmeric, the local quintet's guitar-driven warmth recalls Nineties slowcore icons Bedhead in mellowed aesthetic, and the Feelies and Yo La Tengo's enduring indie rock romanticism. Phillip Niemeyer and Mikila Zaorski trade vocal duties from song to song, making TJP's debut long-player play out like real-time conversation, the former's bratty, deadpan delivery contrasting Zaorski's wispy, aching voice. "Let's Burn Down Westlake" imagines doing just that with 50-cent lighters and a restrained recklessness, while closer "I Am a Songbird" veers off into garage lo-fi. Thinly veiled frustration pulses in album standout "The House-Husband Stomp," a hopeful piano overlaid on the anchor of Chronicle Listings Editor Mark Fagan's steady, sweeping guitar line. On "Backwards Disaster," Zaorski sings, "Two drinks, political discussions/ Eight drinks more, and he's hitting on her cousin's wife," her gentle voice painting the tragic comedy of dysfunctional domesticities in pastel, rosy hues. That's a thread worth unraveling on Forget to Remember to Forget. ****

THE CUCKOOS (Jiggy Jig)

Acid rockers the Cuckoos look young enough to have had grandparents dropping acid and flashing peace signs in the Sixties. That said, fortunately, the Austin quartet's debut EP doesn't sound like they raided grandma's record collection and never moved beyond it. Frontman Kenneth Frost boasts a gothic baritone as evocative of the Reagan years as the summer of love, and he utilizes lush, Germanic synths alongside swirling organ. Guitarist David North's tones don't fetishize the past, while the rhythm section grooves like it's heard a contemporary R&B tune or two. Indeed, the bluesy "Get It On" and seething "It's Too Late" tumble psychedelic rock more by association than practice, and the ambitious "New Sunrise" invokes several styles without declaring loyalty to any of them. On the other hand, "Mind Breakthrough" wallows in a trippy arrangement, wah-wah guitar fills, and lyrics like, "She'll reconstruct your psychedelic mindframe." The land of psychedelic rock has open borders and a liberal immigration policy. $\star \star \star$

OBSCURED BY ECHOES Avidonia II: The

Arrival Derailed in order to relocate its studio, local psych quintet Obscured by Echoes picks up its sci-fi tale where it left off on 2015's Avidonia Pt. 1: The Escape. The narrative resumes on Avidonia II: The Arrival but the band's sound has evolved in the layoff. The trunk of the Austin fivesome's tree has become the root, its original Paisley Underground aesthetic buried in the soil. Aboveground, ObE employs prog rock melodies slowed down and stripped of classical pretension, enhanced with a spacey atmosphere that evokes a starship becalmed in an asteroid belt. The burbling synthesizers of Alyson Beaujon and Johnny Flores frost the tunes with florid soundscapes and earworm hooks, letting guitarist Kyle Abrams concentrate on inserting the perfect lick rather than providing sonic muscle. As flamboyant as a glam rocker and as enigmatic as a shaman. Flores' singing becomes the axis of cosmic drifters "The Coast of Sarasille" and "The Great Inoculation." A catchy, rocking gateway drug, "The Mother of Morning" brings the mystery of this bewitching journey into focus. $\star\star\star$

Patty Griffin and Bright Light Social Hour, while Lucinda Williams and Eric Church contribute to the title track. "As a songwriter, I can write about anything," he says. "For me as an old cat, that's a really good place to be. I feel very fortunate and grateful to still be writing these songs and playing 'em for people. I'm enjoying that freedom of writing and not thinking about the future, just writing some gnarly songs that I hope my friends think are cool." – Doug Freeman

Not a Snowflake!"

Dear Luv Doc,

I work in a local business and one of the owners has taken to calling me a snowflake. Even though I know he's politically conservative I don't really think it is a political thing -I don't talk about politics at work - or even away from work for that matter. I think he likes calling me a snowflake because I am in my 20s and he is just playing around. I don't like it either way. I am not a snowflake. I am not overly sensitive or entitled. I prefer to be called by my actual name like everyone else. How do I get him to stop, without jeopardizing my position at work? - Not a Snowflake

Dear NAS, I feel your pain. There is a big difference between being called a name once in a moment of – let's just call it jocularity because I like that word – versus being called a name regularly as a means of subjugation, or even in a more benign sense, as a term of familiarity and affection.

I have a confession to make: I am a member (threw that in there for added irony but you'll have to read a bit further to get the thrust) of the nominally challenged. I was born "Dan Patrick." That truly wasn't much of an issue until the political ascendancy of our fatheaded, bathroom bill-promoting lieutenant governor. In fact, I kind of liked sharing my name with the sharp-witted ESPN sportscaster who I'm sure is also appalled by the behavior of his other Texas resident namesake. No, the real problem with my name comes at the worst place: at the end. My last name is Hardick. Let that roll around on your tongue a bit.

I know, I know. It could have been a lot worse. Even still, it's a long fucking way from Smith. And let me just say for the record, I would have been totally happy with Smith. Or Johnson. I would have killed for Johnson in third grade. Seriously. I would have murdered everybody. Instead, I developed thick skin and a sense of humor that I would like to think has served me well over the years, considering. Even still, given sufficient repetition, my sense of humor still wears thin.

Trust me: Whatever new and hilarious variant you think you just invented in your head, I have actually heard it spoken a hundred times. If you care to test that assertion, just know that sometime around 20 or so, you are likely to hear a retort that will deeply and gravely offend you. It's a talent. I'm not proud of it.

So your boss – even in the best scenario – is an insensitive asshole. We've all been that ourselves, whether we like to admit it or not. We just don't make a habit of it. As our president unfailingly demonstrates on a daily basis, assholes are notoriously thin-skinned. Sensitive. Like snowflakes. They are also stupid, and prove it daily by their inability to successfully negotiate even mundane social situations without annoying others.

Therefore, your best bet with your boss is to very plainly state that you do not like being called "Snowflake" and would like to instead be referred to by your given name. I am not saying this is going to work. After all, your boss is an asshole, but at least after that you can feel free to take the gloves off.

MR. SMARTY PANTS KNOWS

According to the Urban Institute, nonprofit organizations account for about 10% of U.S. wages and salaries and about 5.5% of Gross Domestic Product.

When Anglo-Saxons conquered Britain in the fifth century, they transformed not only their society, but their language. Remnants of their rule remains with the suffix of –ham (as in Birmingham), which meant homestead; –ton (as in Brighton) referred to a farm; and –ing (as in Reading), which meant belonging to or associated with someone.

Seven years after the Bill of Rights was ratified, President John Adams signed into law the Alien and Sedition Acts in 1798, which prohibited untrue criticism of the president.

The medical symbol the caduceus (two snakes wrapped around a pole with wings) is actually the symbol of Hermes, messenger of the gods. In 1902, a U.S. Army Medical Corps officer adopted it as their symbol because he saw it in a medical journal and assumed it was medically linked.

You probably eat bananas wrong. Monkeys, acknowledged experts in the subject, eat them by pinching the end opposite the stem, and peeling downward toward the stem. Most people do the opposite.

> Above is information that Mr. Smarty Pants read in a book, a magazine, or the newspaper; heard on the radio; saw on television; or overheard at a party.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

by Rob Brezsny for June 9-15

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): "When I grow up, I'm not sure what I want to be." Have you ever heard that thought bouncing around your mind, Gemini? Or how about this one: "Since I can't decide what I want to be, I'll just be everything." If you have been tempted to swear allegiance to either of those perspectives, I suggest it's time to update your relationship with them. A certain amount of ambivalence about commitment and receptivity to myriad possibilities will always be appropriate for you. But if you hope to fully claim your birthright, if you long to ripen into your authentic self, you'll have to become ever-more definitive and specific about what you want to be and do.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): As a Cancerian myself, I've had days when I've stayed in bed from morning to nightfall, confessing my fears to my imaginary friends and eating an entire cheesecake. As an astrologer, I've noticed that these blue patches seem more likely to occur during the weeks before my birthday each year. If you go through a similar blip anytime soon, here's what I recommend: Don't feel guilty about it. Don't resist it. Instead, embrace it fully. If you feel lazy and depressed, get REALLY lazy and depressed. Literally hide under the covers with your headphones on and feel sorry for yourself for as many hours as it takes to exhaust the gloom and emerge renewed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): In the early days of the internet, "sticky" was a term applied to websites that were good at drawing readers back again and again. To possess this quality, a content provider had to have a knack for offering text and images that web surfers felt an instinctive yearning to bond with. I'm reanimating this term so I can use it to describe you. Even if you don't have a website, you now have a soulful adhesiveness that arouses people's urge to merge. Be discerning how you use this stuff. You may be stickier than you realize!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Ancient Mayans used chile and magnolia and vanilla to prepare exotic chocolate drinks from cacao beans. The beverage was sacred and prestigious to them. It was a centerpiece of cultural identity and an accessory in religious rituals. In some locales, people were rewarded for producing delectable chocolate with just the right kind and amount of froth. I suspect, Virgo, that you will soon be asked to do the equivalent of demonstrating your personal power by whipping up the best possible chocolate froth. And according to my reading of the astrological omens, the chances are good you'll succeed

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do you have your visa for the wild side? Have you packed your bag of tricks? I hope you'll bring gifts to dispense, just in case you'll need to procure favors in the outlying areas where the rules are a bit loose. It might also be a good idea to take along a skeleton key and a snake-bite kit. You won't necessarily need them, but I suspect you'll be offered magic cookies and secret shortcuts, and it would be a shame to have to turn them down simply because you're unprepared for the unexpected.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You're like a prince or princess who has been turned into a frog by the spell of a fairy tale villain. This situation has gone on for a while. In the early going, you retained a vivid awareness that you had been transformed. But the memory of your origins has faded, and you're no longer working so diligently to find a way to change back into your royal form. Frankly, I'm concerned. This horoscope is meant to remind you of your mission. Don't give up! Don't lose hope! And take extra-good care of your frog-self, please.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): People might have ideas about you that are at odds with how you understand yourself. For example, someone might imagine that you have been talking trash about them even though you haven't been. Someone else may describe a memory they have about you, and you know it's a distorted version of what actually happened. Don't be surprised if you hear even more outlandish tales, too, like how you're stalking Taylor Swift or conspiring with the One World Government to force all citizens to eat kale every day, I'm here to advise you to firmly reject all of these skewed projections. For the immediate future, it's crucial to stand up for your right to define yourself - to be the final authority on what's true about you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): "God doesn't play dice with the universe," said Albert Einstein. In response, another Nobel Prize-winning physicist, Niels Bohr, said to Einstein, "Stop giving instructions to God," I urge you to be more like Bohr than Einstein in the coming weeks, Capricorn. As much as possible, avoid giving instructions to anyone, including God, and resist the temptation to offer advice. In fact, I recommend that you abstain from passing judgment, demanding perfection, and trying to compel the world to adapt itself to your definitions. Instead, love and accept everything and everyone exactly as they are right now.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Lysistrata is a satire by ancient Greek playwright Aristophanes. It takes place during the war between Athens and Sparta. The heroine convinces a contingent of women to withhold sexual privileges from the soldiers until they stop fighting. "I will wear my most seductive dresses to inflame my husband's ardor," says one, "But I will never yield to his desires, I won't raise my legs towards the ceiling, I will not take up the position of the Lioness on a Cheese Grater." Regardless of your gender, Aquarius, your next assignment is twofold: 1) Don't be like the women in the play. Give your favors with discerning generosity, 2) Experiment with colorful approaches to pleasure like the Lioness with a Cheese Grater, the Butterfly Riding the Lizard, the Fox Romancing the River, and any others you can dream up.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Take your seasick pills. The waves will sometimes be higher than your boat. Although I don't think you'll capsize, the ride may be wobbly. And unless you have waterproof clothes, it's probably best to just get naked. You WILL get drenched. By the way, don't even fantasize about heading back to shore prematurely. You have good reasons to be sailing through the rough waters. There's a special "fish" out there that you need to catch. If you snag it, it will feed you for months - maybe longer.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If you chose me as your relationship guide, I'd counsel you and your closest ally to be generous with each other: to look for the best in each other and praise each other's beauty and strength. If you asked me to help foster your collaborative zeal, I'd encourage you to build a shrine in honor of your bond - an altar that would invoke the blessings of deities, nature spirits, and the ancestors. If you hired me to advise you on how to keep the fires burning and the juices flowing between you two, I'd urge you to never compare your relationship to any other, but rather celebrate the fact that it's unlike any other in the history of the planet.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The Milky Way Galaxy contains more than 100 billion stars. If they were shared equally, every person on Earth could have dominion over at least 14. I mention this because you're in a phase when it makes sense for you to claim your 14. Yes, I'm being playful, but I'm also guite serious. According to my analysis of the upcoming weeks, you will benefit from envisaging big, imaginative dreams about the riches that could be available to you in the future. How much money do you want? How much love can you express? How thoroughly at home in the world could you feel? How many warm rains would you like to dance beneath? How much creativity do you need to keep reinventing your life? Be extravagant as you fantasize.
