Founded in 1981 and committed to a progressive point of view, The Austin Chronicle is an independent, locally owned and operated alternative newsweekly.

The Force Is Strong With This One

Star Wars opened in America in 1977 but didn't make its way across the UK until 1978. Culture Editor Richard Whittaker saw the film opening day at an old-timey picturehouse, the Majestic Cinema in Macclesfield, England. He was 7 years old, and his grandmother took him. They ate fish & chips beforehand, and she bought him a rubber ball – information that is perhaps not relevant to this story, but Richard shared it with me anyway, his eyes gone a little faraway. It was a formative day.

I first came to Star Wars on VHS – I don't remember when. Star Wars was just always there, as elemental to me as my inner organs. I spent endless hours reenacting the movies with my much-battered action figures. When I got a little older, I imagined new adventures and put them down on paper, finessing the action, fiddling with the dialogue until it sounded right – in other words, becoming a writer and an editor. Proofreader James Scott helpfully points out I was writing fanfic – we just didn't call it that yet in the Eighties.

So yes: Richard and I both are scratching a big item off our bucket list with this week's cover. The occasion is Richard's interview with Austin filmmaker Robert Rodriguez. Rodriguez has had his own decades-long history with the franchise, one that culminates in the new Disney+ show The Book of Boba Fett, which debuts Dec. 29. See that interview on p.22.

We've got another real treat kicking off in this issue and continuing for a few weeks: the return of Tim Stegall's ongoing history of Austin punk. It's a project Stegall first debuted in these pages in 2019; past installments of his "Austin Punk Chronicles" have explored psychedelia, Roky Erickson and Doug Sahm's early collaboration, and the (brief) rise of glitter rock. This issue launches a three-part series that covers the birth of Austin's first punk band and record store and ends with the Sex Pistols' historic show at Randy's Rodeo. Catch up on past installments at austinchronicle.com/austin-punk-chronicles.

We're on newsstands a day early on account of Christmas, but we'll be back to our regular distribution next week. Here's wishing you all safe and stress-free holidays. And hey – if you have the opportunity to do someone a kindness, go ahead and take it. ■

FLIPPING FOR HAMILTON

Dear Reviewer,

We saw Hamilton at the PAC Dec. 7. At about midpoint, one of the actresses came running across the stage right to left, and at the middle of the stage she did a spectacular, Simone Biles-worthy flip and kept on going. I have seen the original Hamilton on film and I could see no such scene. I was wondering if this gymnastic exhibit was an ad lib by the Austin company, or has the production been revised to include it, or what? Thank you.

BALKING! AT THE BUFFET

Dear Editor,

As a decades-long reader of the Chronicle, I have yet to find a single useful news item about food since Wayne Alan Brenner took over. In this pandemic era, Austin food news should feature ways to enjoy food without undue COVID risk.

To-go meals should be featured as well as ingredients for home-prepared meals. Restaurants should be mentioned for efforts to serve to-go meals with exemplary taste and creativity, and for in-person safe dining measures. The present potpourri of items and food purveyors misses the mark for the present Austin diner's needs.

OPINION VOICES FROM THE COMMUNITY

TEXAS ABORTION BAN IS AN ATTACK ON FREE SPEECH

Texas Senate Bill 8 – also known as the “heartbeat bill” – went into effect on September 1. The legislation has dominated news cycles nationwide as the most extreme abortion ban in the country. As of now, abortions past the sixth week of pregnancy are not allowed in Texas, with no exceptions granted for rape or incest. The extremity of this abortion vacuum is already apparent, with Texans fleeing to Oklahoma, New Mexico, and other surrounding states in pursuit of necessary care. While SB 8 has severe consequences for bodily autonomy of pregnant people, the policy also quietly – and ominously – restricts the free speech rights of all Texans.

Every two years when the Texas legislative session rolls around, Texans can count on one thing to always be true: Republican legislators are bound to champion an inventive strategy that further curtails the state's already minimal abortion rights. Creatively, this legislation enables individuals to take civil action against those involved in the procurement process for an abortion beyond six weeks. The terms of the bill are vague, but this could include providing transportation, funding, or even information. The scope of the law is purposefully left very wide, as any individual, regardless of whether or not they know the patient or even live in our state, will have the legal ability to pursue a suit for at least $10,000. This runs against the norm for launching a civil suit, as individuals typically must suffer legal damages or injury themselves.

SB 8 restricts the right of an individual to use their voice to help another person obtain an abortion. Free speech is foundational for our democracy. Fifty-nine percent of Americans believe that people should have the right to freely express their opinions, even unpopular or controversial thoughts, in public. The 2020 Texas Republican platform agrees with this assertion, going so far as to declare that all opinions must have the right to be heard without fear of censorship or reprisal. The Texas government has forcibly asserted itself into the modern free speech debate by generating anxiety and fear to stifle voices of those within the abortion rights movement. Leading Texas Republicans Gov. Greg Abbott and U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz have made their opinions crystal clear on the importance of protected free speech. SB 8 sidelines this constitutional right as the legislature's chosen cost to essentially eliminate abortion.

The Supreme Court has allowed SB 8 to be effective for around two months now in Texas. Abortion rights organizations challenged the law, prompting the court to make a decision on whether their case could move forward. On December 10, the court held that the case challenging the legislation can proceed. However, this ruling was far from a victory for abortion rights advocates. Rather, the court effectively created a loophole for nullifying constitutional rights, allowing Texas state lawmakers to successfully evade judicial review with their use of private lawsuits. With no stay granted, the abortion ban is still the active law in the state. This technique of skirting judicial review has already had a ripple effect, with California Gov. Gavin Newsom citing the court's decision as his inspiration for new legislation targeting gun rights.

You don't have to be one of the thousands of people who proudly donned a pink beanie and marched to the U.S. Capitol building to recognize that this legislation is wrong. Conservatives have wildly overstepped, disrespecting the free speech rights they claim to value. With the future of reproductive rights in the country hanging in the balance, pregnant Texans deserve much more than falling victim to legalized alt-right vigilante fantasies. They deserve their liberty, the bedrock of the Lone Star State. ■

Life Beyond the Cop Shop?

ULI-Austin members craft hypothetical – but plausible – visions for APD's unloved HQ

Flashback time to ye olde Ninedeez, when – just like 10-1 and Project Connect and building a new airport and redeveloping the old one – the creation of a new Austin City Hall had become a saga of novelistic complexity: Do we need one? How big? Where? Whose project can we attach it to, or replace with it? This went on for years, and at some mid-stream point, this reporter asked the late Gus Garcia (then mayor pro tem), "Why not put it on Waller Creek? You already have APD and the Avante Building [today's Waller Creek Center, the headquarters of Austin Water]. You could build it in between."

AUSTIN AT LARGE
 BY MIKE CLARK-MADISON

Every inch the gentleman, Gus did not say out loud that I should stop hitting myself with the stupid stick, but he must have thought it. Instead, he briskly ticked off every possible reason why this was not, in his mind, a viable option: It floods. Waller Creek is gross. It's right next to the Salvation Army. And I-35. We can't control what gets built around it. It's under four or five Capitol View Corridors. It's too close to Sixth Street. Did I say it floods? And really, who wants to be right next to APD?

This all came to mind as I viewed the two proposals crafted, and presented last week, by teams of younger members of the Austin chapter of the Urban Land Institute, competing in the latest edition of its "Battle of the Plans" program. The site to be transformed? The Austin Police Department headquarters on Eighth Street. What constraints make this a challenging exercise? Basically everything Gus Garcia, who died in 2018, laid out 25 years ago, with a few intervening twists.

AND $300 MILLION, AT LEAST

Gus, who would ascend to the mayor's chair in 2001 in the wake of 9/11, lived long enough to see the substantial transformation of Downtown Austin from the semi-dereliction of the mid-Nineties and prior. This stretch of Downtown's northeast quadrant, though, has remained remarkably resistant to getting its glow-up. It's not for a lack of trying; we, as taxpayers, spent $120 million or so on the Waller Creek flood control tunnel and will spend a few million more on supporting the largely privately funded Waterloo Greenway. The Austin Resource Center for the Homeless, which opened in 2004 and was intended, somewhat wishfully, to improve upon the street- and creek-level conditions for the unsheltered in this area, has also cost us many millions, some percentage of which can be broken out as public space management, needed to make ULI-Austin's framing of APD HQ as a site "ripe for rejuvenation" more plausible. Even I did my part, as one member of the ad hoc project team (the I-35 Makeover Coalition) that brought you the Brontosaurus Bridge, for which we held a snap design competition not unlike Battle of the Plans.

What no amount of city investment heretofore can fix, though, is the devaluing effect of the stupid and oppressive Capitol View Corridors and the ever-ambiguous vision for I-35 that could either greatly enhance this "East and West Austin gateway site," as one of the ULI teams described it, or completely destroy it. Those things, as much or more than the condition of Waller Creek, have weighed down plans to reboot Downtown's northeast, except on the few blocks that the view corridors have left unspared, such as the old Brackenridge Hospital campus. They are indeed why low-margin uses like Red River's indie bars or social services agencies clustered here in the first place.

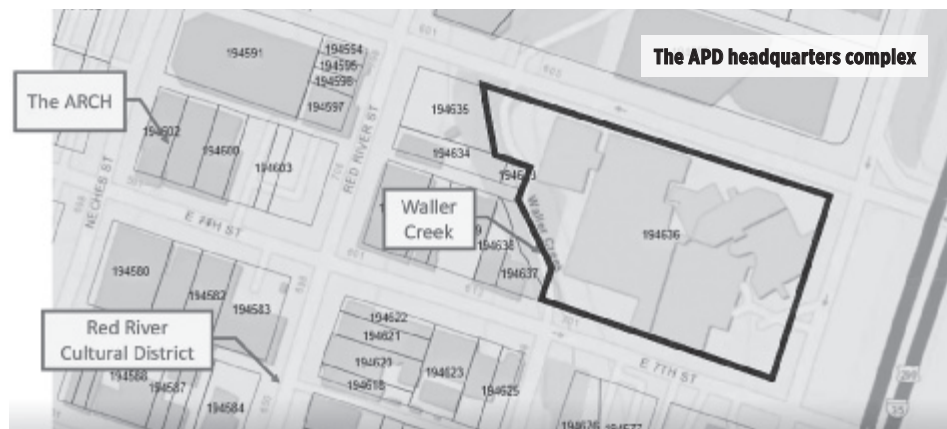

The APD HQ property is 2.75 acres in a Downtown where developers have erected towers far taller than anything that loomed over the Watson/Garcia mayoralties at the turn of the century on scraps of land one-fifth that size. But because of the aforementioned constraints, this site, valued at $21.5 million, was visioned-up and costed-out by the ULI Young Professionals as a 10-story building. No amount of creativity, industry skill, or even greed and avarice can get free of the dead hand of the Goddess of Liberty, showing Austin's who's boss around here.

HISTORY HAPPENED HERE!

One of the ULI teams opted to call its project the Austin Public District (see, APD still, clever) and the other went with Swante, as in Sir Swante Palm, namesake of the park and school a few blocks south of APD HQ, leader of the Swedish community that 150 years ago made the Waller Creek corridor its home. Both teams, who only had a month to develop their hypothetical proposals as if the city and Waterloo Greenway had issued an actual RFP, quickly and fully committed large chunks of their compounds to 100% affordable housing, the cost of which is offset by the stylish Swante with market-rate units, and in the Public District vision with office space. Both also went with amenities targeted to the corridor – event venue spaces, recording and artists' studios, a ground-floor food hall to feed the Greenway tourists. And both made their pro formas work, though not without effort, to deliver a $200-ish million project, should anyone want it.

Which someone might! The impetus for this competition was sparked more than a year ago, when then-Council Member Jimmy Flannigan added a provision to explore APD HQ redevelopment to the Council f-da-police omnibus resolution after the cops shot up Black Lives Matter protests outside their door. The meaning there was more explicitly burn this place down than ripe for rejuvenation, and the political and historical significance of a conscious and symbolic effort to kick APD out of Downtown was not lost on either team. The official city position, as ULI-Austin describes it: "Although the building has been home to Austin's police department for nearly 40 years, the city will consider proposals for the redevelopment of the property as part of [its] periodic realignment of municipal facilities."

It's a Wrap!

City Council ends the year by teeing up a couple of thorny issues for consideration in 2022

City Council's last regular meeting of 2021 was back on Dec. 9, but members finished the year with a couple of small meetings on big issues in the past week – taking care of two key pieces of unfinished business by teeing them up for the full Council to take on in January.

Last Wednesday, Dec. 15, the Council Audit and Finance Committee considered a request from three key city land use commissions – Planning, Zoning and Platting, and the Board of Adjustment – for Council to approve bylaw changes to keep their public meetings at City Hall, thus overruling city staff's plan to move them to the new Permitting and Development Center behind Highland. After hearing the change in location excoriated by public speakers, along with officers of all three bodies, the committee members – CMs Alison Alter (chair), Leslie Pool, Mackenzie Kelly, and Kathie Tovo, with Mayor Steve Adler absent but sending in questions – discussed the matter for a bit and settled on what seemed like a consensus: They couldn't support the specific request for bylaw changes (even City Council sometimes meets outside City Hall), and there's nothing wrong with the PDC as a meeting place. However, it does seem illogical and bad messaging to take the city's most attended, and often most contentious, meetings out of the seat of government; nor does there seem to be any pressing need for the move (left unsaid: other than to prioritize staff's convenience over the public's).

The CMs kicked around ideas about what kind of direction Council could give to staff to ensure these meetings stay at City Hall, but after a staff reminder that they needed to stick to the specific item on the agenda, they voted unanimously to issue no recommendation, but to forward the matter on – not just the bylaw change, but the more general question of board and commission meeting venues – for the full Council to consider at its first meeting of the new year, Jan. 27.

Then on Monday, Dec. 20, the full Council held a special called meeting to consider creating a tax increment reinvestment zone for the South Central Waterfront district, which is essentially the entire commercial area between Auditorium Shores and the mouth of Bouldin Creek – most notably including the old Austin American-States- man property on South Congress (see "Council Slows Staff's Roll ...," Dec. 10).

Opponents call it a $278 million tax giveaway: That's the calculated value of the tax money that will be dedicated to infrastructure and amenities within the district, instead of going into the general city budget, over a 20-30 year period, if the plan is approved as proposed. The crux of their argument is that the development would happen anyway, without any need for this public investment, making this plan a violation of Texas tax code, which reserves this funding mechanism for properties where "development or redevelopment would not occur solely through private investment in the reasonably foreseeable future" without the TIRZ.

That's patently not true in this case, as Bill Bunch stressed in a long letter to Council shortly before the meeting, terming the scheme "another massive corporate welfare handout," and asking them to reject it outright, or at least postpone it until it can get more scrutiny than is possible at this point.

Proponents say that money will indeed buy public amenities and benefits for this very important public space, that the developers would not put in by themselves. But it's hard to deny that the rush to approval – including a holiday-week special called meeting – is at least a bad look, and a common tactic for developers' agents trying to sneak something through with a minimum of public input. Hence Mayor Adler's early morning plea on the Council message board the morning of the meeting, urging that Council simply set up the structure now, "so we can start the clock on the real estate" valuation during the current calendar year. Meanwhile, they could keep "all options, including geographic area, open and available to us next year," in order to have "a dedicated work session on this issue in January or February and then to make any and all changes to the preliminary plan or even to reject the TIRZ altogether."

Several of the CMs appeared to have significant misgivings about the plan overall, but on that basis, reserving the right to amend or reject the proposal at that future date – and with a Tovo amendment adding affordable housing to the list of desirable public benefits – they voted unanimously (with Pool and Greg Casar absent) to create the TIRZ, and have staff prepare for that in-depth discussion in the new year. See you then.

UT student government implodes: half the exec board gone, remaining members facing removal next semester

BY SKYE SEIPP

UT-Austin Student Government is crumbling. At the beginning of the fall 2021 semester, there were seven executive board members. Only three remain, and each of them faces possible impeachment at the start of next semester.

From sexual assault allegations to a lack of transparency and accountability, the SG Executive Board – the president, vice president, and five appointed directors – has come under repeated attack. The unrest started when senior Antony Rodriguez (not a member of UT student government) posted SG's budget on social media in October and asked for transparency in how it spends money.

One of the revelations: Executive board members reserve $30,000 for their own tuition stipends, while only allocating about $16,000 for scholarships. Outrage spiraled from there. At the SG meeting the following Tuesday, Rodriguez said some members attacked his character and were interrogating him rather than taking responsibility:

"During that meeting, people saw how toxic the environment is."

Following the meeting, nearly 200 students joined a Twitter Space to discuss the situation. During that session and future Spaces – many of which lasted for hours – more issues with executive board members came to light. Students began questioning SG's involvement with the Tejas Club spirit organization, which has come under scrutiny and drawn protests after some members were accused of sexual assault and the organization apparently attempted a cover-up.

Nicolas Gonzalez, at the time the administrative director on the executive board, was a member of Tejas. Students began demanding that SG disassociate from the organization. Board advocacy director Mackenzie Smith and chief of staff Meera Sam were both present at the October Twitter Space and told the crowd, after getting the OK, that SG would disaffiliate from Tejas.

That following day, Smith said she expected the executives were going to draft a statement against Tejas. But that didn't happen. That evening, sexual assault accusations were raised against SG Vice President Ethan Jones, Smith said; she frantically tried to reach SG President Kiara Kabbara, who didn't respond until the next morning. Executive members met to draft a statement on Friday, but Smith said the other members wouldn't permit the use of words like "disassociate" or "disaffiliate" in the statement. By Monday, the statement still hadn't been released, which caused Sam and Smith to resign.

The remaining board members then released a statement that Gonzalez would be stepping down, but did not address the accusations against Jones. He eventually resigned on Nov. 5, and Smith says a Title IX complaint has now been filed against him. Current SG executives and Jones did not respond to requests for comment.

Earlier that week, at its Nov. 2 meeting, the SG assembly introduced legislation to call a vote of no confidence; Walker Adams, the LBJ School of Public Affairs SG representative, said it was decided to hold that vote on Nov. 9. That evening, Graduate Student Assembly President Trip Davis, a member of Tejas, objected that the executive summary provided was longer than 200 words – a rule rarely observed for other SG legislation – but failed to stop the no-confidence motion that asked all three remaining executive board members to resign or face impeachment. None has yet stepped down.

The assembly also approved a measure to hold a campuswide referendum on Dec. 8 to see if the student body had confidence in the executive board, but Kabbara vetoed the measure. Articles of impeachment have been introduced against Kabbara; universitywide representative Amanda Garcia says the 31-member SG Assembly plans to introduce articles of impeachment next semester, at its Jan. 25 meeting, against communications director Madison Brown and financial director Grant Marconi. She says it's uncertain if they'll have the two-thirds majority needed to remove them from office.

Adams intends to introduce legislation to abolish the executive board next semester, which he said will be easier for other representatives to support than a full abolishment of SG. "Every year you get a new [SG] president, but you see the same dysfunction and so with that in mind, I fully support the abolishment of student government," Adams said.

It wouldn't be the first time students abolished SG. In the spring of 1978, following a petition for a referendum, students voted to abolish the student association. The vote happened after months of drama that started in the fall of 1977 and included the association's president calling other leaders "résumé padders," and other students complaining that representatives were looking out for the interest of regents and administrators after becoming a university "agency," which meant its budget was funded by the UT System, according to reports in The Daily Texan at the time. SG was reestablished in the spring of 1982.

"Maybe in the past student government has been a space for really big change to happen and a really good space for students to leverage their power [against the] administration," Garcia said. "It's not really doing that anymore, a lot of people enter this space to be self-serving and for the title." ■

STUNNING $67M VERDICT IN APD SHOOTING CASE

A Travis County jury last week awarded the family of Landon Nobles $67 million in damages in a wrongful death lawsuit in federal court against Austin police, who shot the 24-year-old Black man after an altercation on East Sixth Street in May 2017.

The stunning sum far surpasses any amount awarded to families of people killed by the Austin Police Department in the past decade; those payouts cumulatively total just over $8 million. Prior to the Nobles verdict, the largest sum awarded in a police excessive force case was a $3.25 million settlement in 2017 with Ketty Sully, the mother of 17-year-old David Joseph, shot and killed by an Austin police officer in February 2016.

City officials can appeal the size of the jury award, either with the trial judge or in future proceedings. “The city acknowledges the jury verdict and will explore all options as we move forward,” a spokesperson said. “The city and the officers are genuinely surprised by the verdict, both the question of liability and certainly on the dollar amount awarded.”

In May 2017, during the Pecan Street Festival, Nobles was believed to have fired a gun outside of the Jackalope on East Sixth Street after an argument with others. Bystander phone video captured the confrontation, but Nobles is not shown firing a gun; witnesses at the trial testified he was not armed. Nobles began running after Austin police Lt. Richard Egal knocked him down with his bike. Egal and Cpl. Max Johnson viewed this movement as a threat and fired five shots, three of which struck and killed Nobles. Neither officer faced criminal charges and both are still on the force.

The verdict comes as the city and its police officers face numerous excessive force lawsuits stemming from APD’s violent response to peaceful, if angry, Black Lives Matter protesters in the summer of 2020. The Nobles case was defended by city staff attorneys, who did not need to pay for outside counsel for the officers involved; that’s not so in at least some of the BLM cases working their way through the courts.

In two of those cases, brought by Justin Howell and Anthony Evans, City Council has asked the Law Department and APD to pursue settlements with the victims – a move that could result in more expedient justice and fewer tax dollars spent defending the APD officers accused of using excessive force. Council also voted to reduce the amount paid to Richards Rodriguez & Skeith, the outside firm hired to defend the officers in these cases, by $189,000 in the Howell case and $210,000 in the Evans case.

“We need to do right by these injured young men and their families, rather than spend resources fighting them in court,” Council Member Greg Casar said of the resolutions, which he sponsored. Council will likely be briefed in executive session, early next year, on potential settlement offers in the Howell and Evans cases, and then later on potential responses to the Nobles verdict.

Rosemont residents return under dubious conditions

BY LINA FISHER

After months of uncertainty and several relocations to Airbnbs for families forced out of their homes by mold and other unsafe conditions at the Rosemont at Oak Valley apartments, last week it seemed there was finally an end in sight. In a press release, the Strategic Housing Finance Corporation, owner of Rosemont and an affiliate of the Housing Authority of Travis County, stated that relocated residents began returning to their repaired units Dec. 5: “It has been a long and arduous process,” said Patrick Howard, executive vice president of SHFC, “but with the collective efforts of residents, contracted professionals, and Travis County Commissioners Court, we are now able to safely return residents to their homes.”

“Tenants in Texas have the right to request repairs that are based on safety and health conditions. It’s not something that [SHFC] can decide; they’re required by the law to fix these things.”

BASTA’S GABBY GARCIA

But all is not as fixed as SHFC makes it seem, according to residents and their organizing allies at BASTA (Building and Strengthening Tenant Action), who held a press conference Dec. 15 raising questions about the conditions of renewed leases. Of the 87 families that received eviction notices in July, about half were relocated to Airbnbs; the other half remained at Rosemont, some living in construction zones.

On Dec. 10, during a walk-through of her unit before coming back, Brittany Garza was unexpectedly handed a document with three choices to sign, in order to receive her keys: 1) “Accept the condition of the unit” as is and move back in, 2) do not accept the condition and terminate the lease, or 3) accept the condition upon completion of additional repairs, but only if “agreed to by the management company or owner.”

Garza told the Chronicle she felt forced to sign the document to be able to move back in but was extremely wary of the third option, leaving it up to management’s discretion if any additional repairs are needed. “I just felt like they were trying to cover themselves.”

BASTA representatives, who commissioned their own mold inspection for Garza’s unit and did find elevated moisture and visible mold, question the legality of this paperwork maneuver, as Rosemont tenants never terminated their leases. “They’re saying, ‘If you do not sign this exact form, then you’ve abandoned your unit, and we will evict you,’ which we think is an illegal lockout,” explains BASTA’s Shoshana Krieger. Furthermore, it’s a move that goes against the Commissioners Court’s changes to SHFC’s bylaws at the beginning of October to include a Tenants Bill of Rights, which states that SHFC must keep properties in good repair.

Gabby Garcia of BASTA says SHFC has told them it’s still determining if the amendments to its bylaws are legal, “basically completely ignoring the directives from the county commissioners at this point ... It’s like they’re playing chicken. A lot of the tenants who they’re doing this to are so tired and just want to go back home, and they’re going to give in.” She seems to be right, as around 10 tenants have already signed the paperwork to get their keys back, including Garza, who says, “At the end of the day, we want to come home.”

But Garcia maintains, “Tenants in Texas have the right to request repairs that are based on safety and health conditions. It’s not something that [SHFC] can decide; they’re required by the law to fix these things. For the tenants who have been forced or tricked into signing these, we feel there’s still an argument to be made that [SHFC is] not allowed to make them sign away that right.” ■

DON'T GIVE THE GIFT OF COVID THIS SEASON: GET TESTED!

Amidst Austin’s high community transmission rate, Austin Public Health officials are urging residents to get tested for COVID-19 before and after traveling this holiday season. Anyone potentially exposed to the virus or experiencing any signs or symptoms – regardless of vaccination status – should get tested, too. Mild symptoms of COVID-19 include fever, cough, headache, runny nose, loss of sense of smell/taste, sore throat, and/or diarrhea, according to APH.

APH testing sites and vaccine clinics will be closed for the Christmas holiday Thu.-Sun., Dec. 23-26, as well as for New Year’s Fri.-Sun., Dec. 31-Jan. 2. As the Chronicle went to press on Tuesday, Dec. 21, the following testing sites were scheduled:

George Morales Dove Springs Recreation Center

(Walk-In) 5801 Ainez
Wed., Dec. 22 & Tue.-Thu., Dec. 28-30: 8am-2pm

Travis County Exposition Center

(Drive-Through) 7311 Decker
Wed., Dec. 22 & Mon.-Thu., Dec. 27-30: 8am-2pm

PCR testing at APH sites is not rapid; the turnaround on results typically takes 1-2 days. Tests at APH are free. The Texas Department of State Health Services has compiled a list of testing sites – including private pharmacies, public health centers, and urgent care centers – across the state. Users are advised to check location hours and referral requirements (if applicable) before visiting a site. To see the list, go to dshs.state.tx.us/coronavirus/testing.aspx, scroll down to the bottom of the page, and click “View COVID-19 Test Collection Sites.” – Beth Sullivan

Racist Relic Rock Removed in Lockhart

Campaign to move Confederate statue finally clicks

BY BRANT BINGAMON

Lockhart residents are celebrating the removal of a Confederate monument that stood in front of the Caldwell County Courthouse for 98 years. The monument, which has strong ties to the Ku Klux Klan, was quietly relocated to the Caldwell County Jail Museum on Dec. 16.

“Yeah, we got our relic rock moved,” said Margaret Carter, a leader of Lockhart’s Black Lives Matter activists.

“It’s right on the street that I was born and raised on, where my family still resides, but we’re not disappointed. People say, ‘Why move it? Now it’s over in your neighborhood and you’re still going to see it.’ Yeah, but it’s not in front of a courthouse where everyone is supposed to be able to go in and believe that justice will be served. That’s the difference.”

Carter has worked to get the monument moved for 15 years, but it never seemed possible until the success of the BLM demonstrations she helped organize last summer. Carter and other Lockhart residents joined with recent Austin transplants including Cody Kimball of Bluebonnet Records, as well as the staff of Mano Amiga, a social justice organization with an office directly across from the courthouse. Together, they got the Caldwell County Commissioners Court to consider the monument’s relocation.

“It’s not in front of a courthouse where everyone is supposed to be able to go in and believe that justice will be served. That’s the difference.”

MARGARET CARTER

Caldwell County Judge Hoppy Haden leads the five-member court. “I was firmly against moving it,” Haden said. “I wanted to leave it where it was and then put a plaque up, just contextualizing what went on – you know, that people in Caldwell County no longer believe in slavery or any of the other things that the Civil War was fought over.”

Haden’s views shifted as he participated in a citizen’s advisory committee formed to study the issue. He and others uncovered articles and advertisements from the Lockhart Post-Register that described the political atmosphere surrounding the monument’s placement in 1923, including a Ku Klux Klan rally three months before it was installed that brought 2,000 people into downtown Lockhart to hear speeches from prominent citizens.

Just as important to Haden’s change of heart was the testimony of Sterling Riles, a Black Lockhart resident and veteran with 13 years of combat duty in Iraq and Afghanistan. Riles told the commissioners that asking African Americans to accept the monument was like asking Jews to accept a memorial to the Nazis. Haden recalled Miles’ remarks: “This stuck with me and resonated with me and this was what ultimately got me off the fence – he just made the comment that ‘when I pass that monument I wonder when

I come to this courtroom, if I’m going to get a fair shake.’ So I certainly never want anyone ever to feel that way coming into the commissioners courtroom.”

Ultimately, the commissioners voted 4-1 to relocate the monument. Carter, Kimball, and Mano Amiga helped raise $29,600 to finance the move. Haden is comfortable with the compromise, although it could end his political career. “I think it was the right thing to do,” he said. “And if you saw me, I’m standing here with a cowboy hat and jeans on – you wouldn’t put my name next to the word ‘progressive.’ But I’m up for reelection this year and I don’t know if it’s gonna cost me or not. We shall see.” ■

State Ban on Delta-8 Fails in Court (Again)

After yet another favorable Delta-8 ruling, it doesn't look like the popular cannabis products will be removed from Texas retail shelves anytime soon. On December 10, the Texas Supreme Court sided with Austin hemp and CBD retailer Hometown Hero, upholding the legality of the THC isomer for the foreseeable future.

For more than a month, Hometown Hero, its founder Lukas Gilkey, and cannabis advocates across the state have been riding a high from repeated victories across the Texas court system. In early November, a Travis County district court issued an injunction in Hometown Hero's lawsuit against the Texas Department of State Health Services; the agency's attempt to quickly reverse the decision was rebuffed at the 3rd Court of Appeals and now by SCOTX, which left the injunction in place and sent the case back to the appellate court. It could take up to a year for the case to come back on the 3CA's docket – just in time for the 88th Texas Legislature to take a side in the dispute.

The injunction granted by District Judge Jan Soifer applies to all THC isomer products, including Delta-10 and THC-O.

The brouhaha began in September, when DSHS posted a notice on the website for its Texas Consumable Hemp Program “clarifying” that Delta-8 had, in January, been added to the state's Schedule I list of controlled substances, possession of which is a felony. As retailers have been selling Delta-8 products for more than a year, thinking they were legal under House Bill 1325 – the 2019 legislation that legalized hemp production – they successfully argued that DSHS had provided insufficient notice for their action.

However, the injunction granted by District Judge Jan Soifer has impacts beyond the specifics of Hometown Hero's procedural complaint, as it applies to all THC isomer products, including Delta-10 and THC-O. Kemal Whyte, owner of Austin-based retailer Grassroots Harvest, sells all those products in his stores and described Delta-10 as similar to Delta-8, and THC-O as slightly stronger. Currently, the only cannabinoid regulated by state law is Delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol, the main psychoac-

Lukas Gilkey, Hometown Hero founder

tive ingredient in marijuana; the 2019 bill defined legal “hemp” as cannabis products with less than 0.3% concentrations of Delta-9 THC, but says nothing about other isomers. This is the second case in which DSHS has been shot down for trying to regulate cannabis beyond the authority granted by HB 1325; the first involved the agency's unilateral attempt to ban all smokable hemp products, which was likewise enjoined by District Judge Lora Livingston in 2020.

Whyte believes the legalization of THC isomers is a step toward what he says is the right direction: legalization of recreational marijuana. “We are heading in that direction, but very slowly,” Whyte said. “If it were just a matter of safety, we’d be there already.”

ROBERT RODRIGUEZ OPENS THE BOOK OF BOBA FETT

The Austin filmmaker takes the mask off Star Wars' enigmatic bounty hunter for new Disney+ show

BY RICHARD WHITTAKER

Who's the coolest killer in Star Wars?

Don't fry your circuits; we all know it's Boba Fett. In the battle between the Empire and the Rebel Alliance, he was a man with his own agenda.

Like every kid eager for the second installment of George Lucas' saga set a long, long time ago in a galaxy far, far away, in 1980 a young Robert Rodriguez was fixated on the helmeted figure. "The pre-publicity was all about who the new characters were," he said, "but [Boba] was already a star before the movie came out, and we were all looking forward to seeing him."

"Anything called a bounty hunter back then was immediately a badass," he said, but Boba Fett was everything a young kid could want from an interstellar rogue. "He had a cool ship, a cool name, he was shrouded in mystery, and you couldn't see his face, so he was always my favorite character."

Now the kid that smuggled his action figures into school so he could play with them under his desk has the best Christmas gift imaginable. The director of Desperado and Alita: Battle Angel is now the executive producer of The Book of Boba Fett, the new series about the mysterious Mandalorian. Not only that, but he's directing several episodes in the first season, which debuts on Disney+ on Dec. 29. He said, "When I started doing this show, I realized how many times I've dressed as Boba Fett at Halloween, how many toys and images I have around the house. After all this time, I can go back and write it all off as research."

It's also been an amazing opportunity to enter the world of one of his all-time cinematic heroes: George Lucas – or, as Rodriguez called him, "the biggest independent filmmaker of all time." It's hard not to see similarities. Both built their own indie studio outside of Hollywood – Lucas' Lucasfilm in San Francisco, Rodriguez's Troublemaker Studios in Austin. Both created franchises outside of the studio system. Both were always on the bleeding edge of filmmaking tech. Over the years, Rodriguez has been lucky enough to call Lucas a friend, kindred spirit, and mentor. "Being able to handle his babies like this, yeah, you feel like you're from that pedigree."

And Boba Fett was a perfect fit for Rodriguez, whose movies are filled with antiheroes like Machete, El Mariachi, From Dusk Till Dawn's Seth Gecko, and the vengeful bulldozer Marv in Sin City. But the pairing almost never happened, and the opportunity caught the filmmaker by surprise. He knew his old friend Jon Favreau was producing The Mandalorian, and when he saw the first few episodes of season 1 Rodriguez wrote the Iron Man director to compliment his work. "He wrote back and said, 'Hey, thanks. Any time you want to come play, let me know.' I wrote him and said, 'Anytime, anywhere.' So he wrote back again right away and said, 'Can I call you tomorrow?' He called me the next day and said, 'I need you to bring some of that Alita magic, because I just lost a director for this episode, and we need to start right now. Could you come tomorrow?' 'Oh, yeah, I can come tomorrow.'"

The two friends had both left a little something out. Rodriguez was knee-deep in editing We Can Be Heroes, "but I signed up anyway." At the same time, Favreau omitted to mention that his episode, "The Tragedy," was the full onscreen ass-kicking return of Boba Fett (Temuera Morrison), last seen heading for a new definition of pain and suffering as he was slowly digested over a thousand years in the belly of the all-powerful Sarlacc. But appearances can be deceiving when it comes to this merciless merc. "When I saw the script and saw Boba was in it, I didn't know if he was going to stick around. It wasn't until I finished that episode that [Favreau] said, 'I'm doing a series, and I'd like you to be a part of it.'"

Not much of a surprise, considering Rodriguez's love of antiheroes, his Fett fan status, and the fact that "The Tragedy" was one of the most popular and talked-about episodes of The Mandalorian. The usual calculation is that a page of script equates to a minute of TV. This, he said, was "only about 18, 19 pages," leaving a lot of space for what he was there to do: carnage. "You see in that episode what I'd do with my action figures," he laughed.

It was also one of the episodes least like the rest of the series in how it was shot. If there's one thing that everyone knows about Rodriguez it's that he's a tech head. He was one of the earliest adopters of green screen filmmaking and digital cinematography. In part that's thanks to Lucas, who showed Rodriguez footage of Attack of the Clones while he was mixing Spy Kids at Skywalker Sound and immediately inspired him to go digital. "That's what turned my whole career around," said Rodriguez, "and that's why Jon even asked me to be a part of this show, because of things like Sin City and Alita." So the fact that The Mandalorian was mostly shot on the cutting-edge Volume soundstage, where hi-res LED screens create real-time backdrops, would seem like another plus for Rodriguez. In reality, Boba Fett's return to battle was too big for the Volume stage, and Rodriguez had to head out to Simi Valley with a Star Destroyer's worth of Stormtroopers. "[It] was the one episode that actually shot on location."

By filming "The Tragedy" while not knowing about The Book of Boba Fett he had inadvertently set the tone for the series: Luckily, he said, Favreau's scripts meshed with his visions cherished since childhood, and the mantra for the show became, "What he was like in my episode, let's make him more like that." However, the team wasn't handed a completely blank slate. When Boba Fett debuted in 1980 (we don't talk about the 1978 Star Wars Holiday Special) all audiences knew about Mandalorians was a passing reference in Donald F. Glut's novelization of The Empire Strikes Back. Since then, there have been more films, TV shows, comics, novels, and games that have added extensive details to the Star Wars universe, and that includes much more backstory for Fett himself. Woe betide the storyteller that incurs the wrath of fans by making some canonical blunder. Fortunately, Rodriguez said, to make sure that they didn't use the wrong robot or make some technical blunder that would have fans screaming, there was a whole Jedi holocron of experts to hand: "Resident knows-everything-about-Star Wars [Lucasfilm Executive Creative Director] Dave Filoni, Jon, and people on the crew. We can run everything through a fine sieve [but] we're still telling our own story."

And right now that story is as mysterious as the OG Mandalorian himself. The little that is known right now is that Boba Fett and mercenary Fennec Shand (Ming-Na Wen) are back on Tatooine, trying to build their own criminal empire out of the ashes of Jabba the Hutt's syndicate. But Rodriguez promises there's a big galaxy out there. "What you see in the trailer is in the first 15 minutes of episode 1. So people have no idea what's in store. It's going to blow their minds." ■

The Book of Boba Fett debuts on Disney+ on Dec. 29.

Five Things ...

... to do outdoors this Christmas weekend

BY WAYNE ALAN BRENNER

Because we can only stay inside – whether staring at a screen or a printed page, whether accomplishing needed tasks or just puttering about – for a certain amount of time (YMMV) before we feel the inexorable pull of that really big room with the blue ceiling. And so, when we do go out, why not make it intentional and rewarding? Why not spark a little IRL and AFK joy into our funky, beating hearts while we're still this side of the grave? Here are five possibilities for your holiday consideration.

LANDMARKS: SELF-GUIDED WALKING TOUR

This public program from UT presents art that's broadly accessible and free to all. More than 50 modern and contemporary works are located around the 433-acre campus, the works chosen by a team of specialists and community stakeholders, providing myriad opportunities for discovery. "By creating equitable pathways to meaningful engagement, Landmarks reflects the complex audiences we serve and celebrates our differences." And you know how they say, "There's an app for that," right? Well, there's an app for this, allowing you to tour whenever you wish and at your own pace. landmarks.oncell.com/en/index.html

DIMENSION SCULPTURE PARK

We can't mention this Eastside place often enough, because it's such a respite from the daily grind – even if the daily grind is no more challenging than smoking weed and bingeing ASMR videos on YouTube. Instigated by the team behind Dimension Gallery (located right across the street), this small, verdant park is so well situated and well kept that it'd be a treat even without the unique, outsized sculptures on display. But, oh, those sculptures! Created by some of Austin's finest object makers, they're cynosures for beauty-seeking eyes, nodes of aesthetic wonder within the welcoming scape – and, pro tip, they're also the perfect silent companions for a picnic among the leaves or upon that lawn. 979 Springdale. dimensiongallery.org

Dimension Sculpture Park

ODDITREES

Austin's Odditree Society, founded in 2013 by artist and architect Ann Armstrong and urban forester Angela Hanson, is dedicated to the admiration of unusual trees – trees that have, often due to external conditions, deviated from the norm in interesting ways. (You know: like quite a few Austinites.) The society regularly publishes print and digital media, offers workshops and other events – and, more to the point here, they provide a handy field guide with a map revealing some of the oddest tree inhabitants around our burgeoning burg. Suggestion: This mild weather's great for lacing up those hiking boots and, ah, getting your Lorax on. odditreesociety.org

NORTHERN-SOUTHERN: NO OUTLET AND LEFT IN LEAVES

One of Northern-Southern gallery's responses to the pandemic shutdown of 2020 was to move exhibitions outdoors, featuring a range of local artists creating site-specific objects and situations for pedestrians and wanderers to stumble upon. You could have, quite by accident, come face to face with human-made beauty all over town; but the gallery also offered maps for those wishing to seek out the scattered installations. Now it's been months since the "No Outlet" and "Left in Leaves" projects officially closed, but we know there are still a few pieces left out there, lurking like jewels among the dead ends and alleyways and so on – and we reckon it'd be a fine time for an urban explorer to follow those maps and see just how much of the art still exists. northern-southern.com

JUST GO OUTSIDE

Seriously. Wherever you are when you're reading this – unless you're already outside, clever clogs – just go to the nearest exit and step on through. Move beyond the threshold and let the door close and notice, really notice, how you are: suddenly unsheltered. The air on your skin, cooler or warmer than your body's temperature. The world's impromptu and omnidirectional symphony in your ears. A flood of electromagnetic waves bombarding your photoreceptors with what you recognize as light and shadow and color. Look around. Look up, especially. How does the sky keep going like that until it turns to interplanetary space, and then interstellar space, and then it continues going and, possibly, never stops? Taste infinity on your tongue for a moment, friend. Ponder the miracle of existence. That's art, too. That's the art of living.

THEATRE

GREETINGS FROM SHREWD MOUNTAIN LODGE Ready to solve a mystery, you clever sleuths? Here's a multimedia holiday whodunit – created by Jenny Connell Davis, Shannon Grounds, Trey Deason, and Raul Garza – in which things go awry among the cast and crew of the Winter Festival Play assembled at Shrewd Mountain Lodge. As strange events and sinister accidents continue to pile up, it becomes clear that someone or something is trying to sabotage the production. Note: Subscribers will hear from all six main characters via video messages, holiday cards, and letters in the actual mail over the course of six weeks – along with artifacts, souvenirs, and clues to help solve the mystery. $40-60. shrewdproductions.com.

THE MUTT-CRACKER (SWEET!) The irrepressible Darren Peterson and Circus Chickendog return to the Vortex with their family-friendly circus extravaganza, featuring all manner of delightful antics with a crew of talented rescue dogs and a talking scarlet macaw. Written and directed by Melissa Vogt, with Tyler Mabry's live original score including bits of Tchaikovsky's Nutcracker Suite. Thu., Dec. 23, 4:30 & 6:30pm. Dec. 28-Jan. 2: Tue., 4:30pm; Wed.-Thu., 4:30 & 6:30pm;

Fri., 4:30pm; Sat., 6:30pm; Sun., 4:30pm. The Vortex, 2307 Manor Rd., 512/478-5282. $15-35. vortexrep.org.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL This Dickens classic is returning to the Topfer stage at the Zach for the seventh year, with exciting new songs and new cast members in addition to returning favorites under the direction of director Dave Steakley. (Most importantly, Marc Pouhé is back as Scrooge!) Musical direction by Allen Robertson puts some rockin' wheels under this holiday vehicle and the whole joyous spectacle brings the sin-and-redemption, the ghosts and the glories, the tiny and the Tim, until the much-awaited new year gets here. Through Jan. 2. Wed.-Fri., 7:30pm; Sat.-Sun., 2:30 & 7:30pm. Zach Theatre, 202 S. Lamar. $25 and up. zachtheatre.org.

COMEDY

THE HIDEOUT Live improvisation is back at the Hideout! Take that, 'ronas, right in the old protein sheath! Nothing's gonna slow this Pgraph-led powerhouse of 'prov down – and you, lucky citizen, you get to watch what they do to an unsuspecting stage almost every night of the week. Suggestion: Check that website, STAT. hideouttheatre.com.

COLDTOWNE TV "Set your dial to CTTV for at-home entertainment seven nights a week on ColdTowne's Twitch channel, featuring experimental improv, live podcasts, scripted readings, guest characters, and more." See website for details. coldtownetheater.com.

FALLOUT COMEDY What's the fallout from this pandemic? Who knows, right? But we know this is the Fallout near the end of the pandemic: an eclectic mix of live, mind-rocking comedy from some of Austin's best, all week long. Check the website for details. falloutcomedy.com.

NYE COMEDY TAKEOVER This almost year-closing night of witty banter and general hilarity at UT's Bass Concert Hall is hosted by Gary Owen, and features performances by Lavell Crawford and Kountry Wayne. Wed., Dec. 29, 8pm. Bass Concert Hall, 2350 Robert Dedman, 512/471-2787. $50-100. texasperformingarts.org.

DANCE

BALLET AUSTIN: THE NUTCRACKER We've heard tell that Ballet Austin's annual production of The Nutcracker

is this city's favorite holiday tradition – and we're not fixing to argue. Here's a perfectly calibrated spectacle of delight, in which hundreds of dancers perform Stephen Mills' enchanting choreography to Pyotr Tchaikovsky's score – with live accompaniment from Austin Symphony Orchestra. Thu., Dec. 23, 2pm. Long Center for the Performing Arts, 701 W. Riverside, 512/474-5664. $20 and up. balletaustin.org.

CLASSICAL MUSIC

AUSTIN SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA: THE PAUL SIMON SONGBOOK This evening of music explores Paul Simon's unique artistry as a songwriter from his years with Simon & Garfunkel through his solo albums Graceland and Rhythm of the Saints, with all arrangements fully orchestrated by Jeff Tyzik; vocals by Emily Drennan, Paul Loren, and Daniel Berryman; and Peter Bay as conductor. Note: Bring your favorite food dish and enjoy the concert in a cabaret setting. Wed.-Thu., Dec. 29-30, 8pm. Palmer Events Center, 900 Barton Springs Rd., 512/476-6064. $35-55. austinsymphony.org.

Review: Hideout Theatre's Bah, Humbug! FUN DICKENSIAN LONG-FORM IS A SHORT-TERM CURE FOR THE PANDEMIC BLUES

BY BOB ABELMAN

It didn't take long for Charles Dickens' five Yuletide tales to catch on as secular staples in mid-19th century England. With potent social commentary about the marginalized segments of society within their pages and a loving family at the core of their morals, the popular books and subsequent stage plays showed the industrialized Victorians the Christmas spirit they were sorely missing.

Today, in America, his sentimental A Christmas Carol (currently on stage at the Zach through Jan. 2) still resonates and the Dickensian voice that drives it – with its prim, reassuring British dialect – has long served as the soundtrack to our holiday season. So, it's only fitting that the funny, fast-thinking folks at Downtown Austin's Hideout Theatre have brought back its evening of devised Dickens-based long-form improvisation as alternative Christmas entertainment, appropriately titled Bah, Humbug!

Artistic director and troupe member Roy Janik stands in for the famous author who, after soliciting the audience for suggestions that inform that evening's performance, sits hunched over his desk and provides the intermittent narrative that sets the seven other troupers in motion. The source material's sentimentality and Dickensian voice have been properly pilfered for this production. Janik makes sure that Dickens' signature literary devices and familiar tropes – the chatty, catchphrase-sprouting characters, the contrived coincidences, the melodramatic plots with cheery outcomes – get their due.

Surprisingly, most of the company members selected to perform on the evening of my attendance struggled a bit with the demands of long-form and the Dickens tie-in. In fact, they seemed creatively hamstrung by the period costuming and the guiding narrative, which denied the kind of unsustainable, outside-the-box options typically produced for short-form improv. When dead air or a choice-gone-south occurred, performers were quickly cut off and redirected by Janik's intervention, which turned the improv mantra "yes, and" into "uh, no." This, in turn, caused spontaneity to temporarily stutter as if the targeted troupe member was sucker punched, and caused Sharon Castel and Michael Yew's lighting and sound effects, respectively, to lag behind.

But these are professional, thick-skinned performers we're talking about here and their eventual recoveries from being shut down were astoundingly brilliant. As the performance progressed, so did their secure footing in the diverse Victorian characters they possessed and the overall synchrony of the troupe. When the performance came to a close, the cast did a masterful job of calling back the things that worked during the evening and cleverly tying up all the loose ends.

For audience members weighed down by the pandemic and in desperate need of comradery and comic relief, the Hideout Theatre players' expressions of pure joy upon each other's discoveries were – pardon the unfortunate word choice – infectious. And so, warts and all, Bah, Humbug! proved to be a good night of comedy, which was probably never said about an actual play adapted from Dickens. ■

BOOKS

BOOKS, BOOKS, BOOKS IN ATX Don't forget, citizen: The best place to get your reading material is from Austin's own Malvern Books or Half Price Books or BookPeople or Black Pearl Books or BookWoman stores – in person or online. (And for the ultimate in vintage collectors' editions and unique works on paper, we recommend the excellent South Congress Books.)

Canvas: Hell Year

The pandemic-weary artists in this new group exhibition – Nate Szarmach, Sandra Boskamp, Padaric Kolander, Yamin Li, Arlo Neill, Andrew Smenos, Shayne Murphy, and more – take the year 2021 to task by implementing images of burning cars, face masks, nightmare skeletons, cherubs, and nuclear explosions into their work. Through Jan. 8. Canvas, 1601 E. Cesar Chavez. canvasatx.com.

HOME-O FOR THE HOLIDAYS. This time of year can be tough – and sometimes lonely – for many in the qmmunity. Whether you need a friendly face, a break from the family, or just want to bask in the wonderfulness that is being surrounded by a bunch of fellow queers, many of Austin's gay bars are open this Christmas Eve (Fri., Dec. 24) and Christmas Day (Sat., Dec. 25). Cheer Up Charlies, the Red River staple, announced it will be closed through New Year's Eve (Fri., Dec. 31) due to COVID-19 precautions, according to a statement posted on Cheer Ups' Instagram. Elysium will be open on Christmas Eve for its free Xmas Eve party. Not explicitly queer, but you can expect plenty of synth-pop and goth from DJs Neph and Eugene. 705 Red River. 10pm. Highland Lounge Downtown's two-story dance club is ready for you this Christmas Eve and Christmas Day. Highland typically opens on Friday and Saturday nights at 9:30pm, but check their socials for this week's hours before heading out. 404 Colorado. 9:30pm-2am. The Iron Bear Austin's only bear bar tells me they'll be slinging drinks and serving up their tasty bar food for y'all both Christmas Eve and Christmas Day. They'll be operating with their regular hours, too, so stop by for some afternoon fun or late-night festivities. 301 W. Sixth. 11am-2am. Oilcan Harry's is opening its doors this holiday weekend, Christmas Eve through Sun., Dec. 26, during its regularly scheduled hours. Make a drag show your new Christmas Eve tradition and check out Thursday's Very Ritzy Christmas Eve (see below). 211 W. Fourth. Fri., 7pm-2am; Sat.-Sun., 2pm-2am. Rain on 4th The Fourth Street mainstay will be open on Christmas Eve and Christmas Day for all your holiday needs. 217 W. Fourth. 3pm-2am.

2 TO DO

Very Ritzy Christmas Eve

Host Ritzy Bitz and special guests Celia Light, Cupcake, Cheeki Khant, and Lady Grackle rock around the Xmas tree all night long. Don't forget to wear your favorite holiday sweaters and onesies! Fri., Dec. 24, 10:30pm. Oilcan's, 211 W. Fourth. fb.com/oilcanharrys.

Night in Chicago

Nadine Hughes and her crew bring the beloved musical to life for one night only. Proceeds from the evening benefit Project Transitions. Wed., Dec. 29, 10:30pm. Rain on 4th, 217 W. Fourth. fb.com/rainon4th.

DAY TRIPS BY GERALD E. MCLEOD

The K. Spoetzl Brewery in Shiner took advantage of 18 months of the pandemic without visitors to revamp their brewery tours. The result is an interesting 45-minute walk through the brewing process and 112-year history of the oldest independent brewery in Texas.

The tour leads up a back staircase into the bowels of the mega-modern complex. On the second floor past the shiny copper tanks, the hallway opens to a wall of windows overlooking the bottling line where every drop of Shiner must pass before it crosses your lips.

From there the tour guide talks her way through a museum dedicated to the Shiner story.

It began in 1909 when a group of Czech and German farmers created the Shiner Brewing Association. Bavaria-born Kosmos Spoetzl had worked in breweries around the world when he arrived in Shiner in 1914. His recipe for Shiner Premium mixed a yeast strain from the old country with local artesian water still used today.

Shiner Bock came later as a Lenten beer available only in the spring. The longhairs at Austin's Armadillo World Headquarters helped introduce the dark lager to the world.

Even with its local success, the brewery went through a succession of owners as they tried to compete against national brands. In 1989, the family-owned, San Antonio-based Gambrinus Company took over the Spoetzl family tradition.

GERALD E. MCLEOD

From only distributing in a 100-mile radius of Shiner, Spoetzl Brewery became the largest craft brewery in Texas and fifth top-selling in the U.S. The Spoetzl Brewery in Shiner is about 1.5 hours southeast of Austin. Tours are daily on the hour between 11am and 4pm, and on Sunday between 1pm and 4pm. It's always best to reserve a space at shiner.com.

Austin FC Signs Veteran Winger Ethan Finlay

Following a debut season that fell well below expectations on the field, Austin FC cleared room for several new players to join the club for year two. On Monday, the club revealed the first member of that group of newcomers: veteran winger Ethan Finlay.

Finlay, 31, brings 10 years of MLS experience to Austin, along with 49 career league goals and 42 assists. Though he last played for Minnesota United, his first six seasons were spent with the Columbus Crew under majority owner Anthony Precourt and assistant coach (at the time) Josh Wolff. There, Wolff became something of a mentor figure for Finlay, who was still finding his way as a pro.

"I was an athletic player who had some skill, but sometimes it was running around with my head cut off. [Wolff] identified some of those skills and really had me focusing on how I can make an impact," Finlay told the Chronicle. "I said then to [my Crew teammates] in the locker room, 'This guy is going to be a good head coach someday.' And I still really believe that he will. Tough first season but, you know, Bill Belichick also coached for the Browns at one point in his career."

Finlay is naturally charismatic, comfortable speaking his mind. He holds a leadership role within the MLS Players Association and is a self-described "nerd" when it comes to soccer. He was excited to reconnect with Austin FC head groundskeeper Weston Appelfeller, another old friend from Columbus, to talk field manicuring techniques. He recently became a parent, which factored into his decision to sign with the Verde and Black in free agency.

"I think Austin is a great place to raise a family, so that was an easy box to check. When I looked at the style of play that Austin uses, it fit my profile. Attacking style, really using wingers, natural wingers, inverted at times. It fits all the strengths that I have in my game, a lot of the things that Josh frankly taught me and had me hone in on back in 2014," Finlay said.

Born in the hockey hotbed of Duluth, Minn., Finlay's family moved to North Carolina when he was 5. The sudden dearth of ice and abundance of grass made taking up soccer the logical next step. He became a standout goalscorer at Creighton University and has since carved out a decadelong career as a contributor in MLS.

Finlay primarily plays right wing, which could be a crowded spot for the Oaks this season. Diego Fagundez and Cecilio Domínguez both spent time there during the 2021 season, as did Jared Stroud, who Austin FC signed to a new contract last week after initially declining his team option. One player who won't be in the mix is Round Rock native McKinze Gaines, who was unexpectedly swiped by Charlotte FC as part of last week's MLS Expansion Draft.

Finlay said he has not been given any indication about the size of his role in the squad, which is just how he likes it. He's anxious to compete for minutes and is confident he can still reach his top form.

"Being able to run in behind and break lines has always been my strength. While I'm 31, this last season I was still covering a bunch of ground. I can compare data from my 2014-2015 seasons and I'm right on par with it. So I definitely still have the legs."

He also hopes to ease into a leadership role in the ATX locker room. "I'm not going to come in there and be yelling at guys from day one and telling you this is what you should do. I'm going to have to earn that, earn the respect from the guys around me, the guys who've actually been with the club a little bit longer. And I think if I do that, that'll give me an opportunity to lead this group."

Bloody, Bold, and Resolute

Stark and silvery, Joel Coen's The Tragedy of Macbeth is a gorily stylish look at the Scottish play BY JOSH KUPECKI

There's something about engaging with Shakespeare that instantly takes me back to middle school: musty, library-bound paperbacks, monotone soliloquies in iambic pentameter recited by bored 12-year-olds, an inauspicious beginning, for sure. But after trudging through Taming of the Shrew (still a chore, btw), to then be introduced to a power-hungry lord who ruthlessly carves a bloody path to the throne of Scotland? My adolescent ears pricked up. Witches, slaughtered children, madness, and revenge were right up my alley. Still are, really. Macbeth remains my personal favorite of the Bard's work, and this wicked adaptation from a singular Coen brother (the scruffy one) has now become the same.

From the starkly beautiful black-and-white images cast in the proscenium arch of a 4:3 frame, to the effortless way Elizabethan English rolls off Denzel Washington's tongue, this version is immediately startling in how familiar yet otherworldly it all feels. Scotland is an eternally cloudy and lifeless place and Stefan Dechant's production design compounds this unnerving atmosphere with the foreboding columns and shadows of Giorgio de Chirico. Spilled from this alien land comes a trio of witches (a thrice welcome Hunter), all limbs and prophecy, propelling Macbeth (Washington) to his traitorous fate, poor Banquo (Carvel) to his death, and Lady Macbeth (McDormand) to her fatally overwhelming guilt.

THE TRAGEDY OF MACBETH

The cast is uniformly superb, led by Washington and McDormand as the increasingly desperate (and here older) couple. Alex Hassell as Ross, the informal narrator of the film buffed up to a much larger role in Coen's script, is a perfect mixture of distance and empathy, and his wardrobe is to die for. As Macduff, Corey Hawkins displays a swagger of steely eyed vengeance, but it is an unforgettable Kathryn Hunter as the three witches who carries away the entire film on her crow's wings. She's like a menacing Martha Graham on acid. The whole film has a hallucinogenic quality to it, perfectly suited for the filmmaker's trademark dark wit, as he traces characters making increasingly flawed, and ultimately violent, decisions. Joel Coen's The Tragedy of Macbeth is an outstanding gem of form and content, and I take solace that future generations of English students now have a new text to learn from.

AMERICAN UNDERDOG

This affirmational biopic with the grandiose title wears its Christian-themed inspiration with a capital "I" as it recounts the trials and triumphs of NFL football player Kurt Warner (Levi), the first undrafted quarterback and first-year starter to lead his team to a Super Bowl victory, just five years after stocking shelves at a grocery store. Following the oft-dreaded opening "based on a true story" salvo, American Underdog immediately informs you it's the story of an impossible dream, one in which a Midwestern Don Quixote doggedly tilts at the hierarchal structure of professional football in a struggle to prove his worth to himself, his supportive wife (Paquin, rocking a Pat Benatar do), and the powers that be, embracing a near-unwavering faith in God each step of the way. His prayers are ultimately answered in the form of St. Louis Rams coach Dick Vermeil, paternally played by an alligator-grinned Dennis Quaid, who hires Levi long after his expiration date on a hunch akin to divine intervention.

Without a doubt, Warner's extraordinary ascension to pigskin glory is the stuff of legend, given the odds stacked against him. He failed to make the draft after sitting on the bench for most of his four-year stint at a small Division I-AA college in Iowa; lasted only two days during his preseason tryout for the Green Bay Packers a year later; and ended up helming a team in the lowly Arena Football League (think Rollerball with cleats) to financially support his family. But do we really need the platitude-laden screenplay (based on Warner's autobiography, less arrogantly titled All Things Possible) to preach a you-can-do-it homily every 15 minutes or so, as its real-life hero's dubious aspirations move toward rah-rah reality? It's terribly exhausting.

Levi projects a good-guy quality that endears Warner to the audience, but his limitations as an actor (his go-to expression here is wide-eyed and winsome) impede plumbing any depth in a character that's admittedly crafted as one-dimensional. On the other hand, the physical resemblance between Levi and Warner is uncanny; the former's linebacker build and handsome mug undoubtedly factors in his casting. (And to be fair, the guy has paid his dues.) While Levi gives you someone to genuinely root for, once the movie reaches Warner's debut game for the Rams in 1999, all nuance goes out the window as you're pounded into semi-hysterical submission to cheer for a proverbial win for the gipper. And when the same season's Super Bowl XXXIV is hurriedly crammed into the movie's ending (volume up!), using interspersed footage of the actual game to attempt cinema verité realism, American Underdog becomes scarily ecstatic,

THE KING'S MAN

Somewhere around the middle of the gay panic dance/fight sequence involving Rhys Ifans doing a hideous "stranger danger" impression of Tom Baker's Golden Globe-lauded turn as Rasputin, you'll likely question what exactly the purpose of The King's Man is.

After all, this franchise started with a very simple conceit: What if 007 was a Burberry-clad soccer hooligan? The original 2015 film, Kingsman: The Secret Service, was a fun satire of Bond with some very British class-based humor woven through (it ended with the very working-class Eggsy literally sticking it to royalty). So how, only two films later, has it collapsed into ugly, heavy-handed, and po-faced self-pastiche?

What even is The King's Man? Well, it seems like writer/director Matthew Vaughn watched The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles and thought, "I could do that." (He was, tragically for all involved, extremely wrong.) If you don't remember the series, it was George Lucas' way of getting unwilling teens to absorb history, by placing a younger version of his Nazi-smashing archeologist in a series of real-life events that defined the early years of the 20th century, from the opening of Tutankhamun's tomb to the birth of the blues, and all wars in between. It was witty, smart, and sometimes tragic, and actively encouraged young audiences to seek out the real history. The King's Man is basically the same, but mirthless, dumb, and riddled with disturbing tonal changes.

Vaughn's script (although Karl Gajdusek is equally to blame) is a snickering and bizarrely

Wulver's Stane, streaming as part of this year's Austin Arthouse Film Festival

MAKING YOUR SCREEN INTO AN ARTHOUSE

Austin Arthouse Film Festival goes global for its second virtual year BY ADRIENNE HUNTER

When Giselle de la Rosa and Elizabeth Tabish first met on the set of a commercial shoot, the two creatives bonded over some of the things that inspired them most about Austin and film. Central to those conversations were originality and artistry, which they both saw in arthouse film. Not only did the two go on to make films together, but they would eventually create the Austin Arthouse Film Festival, dedicated to showcasing unique films that they felt did not normally receive the platform they deserve.

Now in its fourth year, the festival will be digitally available Dec. 26-31.

In its first two years, the festival was an in-person event presenting a wide selection of short films. Shifting to the virtual world in response to the pandemic has enabled them to expand the audience, even reaching international viewers. They are now also able to exhibit feature films, as well as short films, to their ever-growing audience, and this year's festival will see over 60 titles available for digital viewing. The spotlighted films include Wulver's Stane, a feature directed by Joseph Cornelison following a person fighting to hide her past while building herself a new life. Also streaming will be My Dinner With Werner, a short by Maverick Moore about the bizarre friendship between Werner Herzog and Klaus Kinski.

De la Rosa and Tabish both said they hope that this year's continued virtual presence will mean more people exposed to films that they wouldn't have the chance to see elsewhere.

They're also working on interactive components, such as an online quiz used to curate a personalized watch list, giving each viewer a unique experience for what may potentially be their first exposure to arthouse cinema, and how its endless originality has the potential to expand minds and hearts. "A lot of people ask what arthouse is," Tabish said. "I wish we had a more succinct answer for it, but it's the sort of cinema that's not going to be in the box office. It's films that are made for the sake of art."

She added, "There aren't always platforms for those types of films and they don't always make money. The passion that directors put into those projects is clear, but there is typically a rare occurrence of some sort of financial payoff. So we want to support them and help them continue to make their films."

Creating that support and community for these innovative filmmakers is something that de la Rosa and Tabish view as integral to the Austin Arthouse Film Festival. They believe that these films hold so much creativity, vision, and potential for impact; it's their goal to curate a platform that allows for audiences to be exposed to those qualities. De la Rosa explained, "If I can marry celebrating art, artists, and film with helping people to see things differently, that will make me very fulfilled."

Austin Arthouse Film Festival, Dec. 26-31. Virtual passes $30. Full lineup and info at theaustinearthousefilmfestival.com.

pompous look at the birth of the Kingsman, the independent secret agency. However, there's little sign of the spy ring until late into this tedious trek around late imperial Europe. The story traipses after pacifist widower aristocrat Orlando Oxford (Fiennes, being very Fiennesian) as he drags his milksop offspring Conrad (Dickinson) through pivotal moments around World War I, with faithful servants Shola (Hounsou) and Polly (Arterton) in tow and occasionally secretly leading the way. A mysterious figure is manipulating world events for a very specific (and, in the context of modern British politics, stupidly tone-deaf) end, so the Oxfords zoom through every major incident, from the assassination of Franz Ferdinand to the trenches of Belgium. All the broad humor of the original film is gone, replaced by clunky and often tasteless gags, and the attempts to extract pathos from genuine tragedies vary from tacky to insulting.

The King's Man wants to be a brief alternative history of the 20th century. It fails. But it does start to show from where that bum sex gag from the first film came.

★ LICORICE PIZZA

D: Paul Thomas Anderson; with Alana Haim, Cooper Hoffman, Sean Penn, Tom Waits, Bradley Cooper, Benny Safdie, John Michael Higgins. (R, 133 min.)

If there's a prevailing theme to the films of Paul Thomas Anderson, it's a simple one: Who is deserving of love? It's an explicit theme in Magnolia and Punch Drunk Love, but barely submerged beneath the surface of There Will Be Blood and Phantom Thread. His romances are convoluted and filled with desperate connections. His familial bonds are bloodied and strained. Yet he's never dealt directly with first love, puppy dog love, like he does in Licorice Pizza, his biographical trip through the San Fernando Valley of 1973.

Envision it as Anderson's variations on Once Upon a Time ... in Hollywood. Both films take place in post-Hollywood life, but from very different perspectives. In Tarantino's revisionist history, the protagonists were aging out of Tinsel Town, trying to evade that long walk into the sunset. Anderson, assembling his story from a mixture of reminiscences from friends and Hollywood lore, sets his characters up with a brighter horizon. After all, Gary Valentine (Hoffman, based in great part on Anderson's friend and former child actor Gary Goetzman) is only 15 when he crashes out of his own rising stardom and is young enough to bounce back into a series of schemes that will end up as fun dinner party stories 30 years later. He's funny and charming, in a husky, dorky way, and manages to convince aimless twentysomething Alana Kane (Haim, who appears with her whole family, including her siblings from rock band Haim) to tag along. Can these two crazy kids make any of this work? Gary's definitely going to try, and Alana does a very bad job of not hanging around with this teen kid.

Licorice Pizza is arguably a return to Anderson's more tenderhearted dramas, most especially Magnolia. It has that same love for his protagonists, rather than the tempered compassion of Punch Drunk Love. It also has the same episodic, almost anecdotal feel, and therein lies one of its structural flaws. A series of interlinked events work better for an ensemble than for a duet, and Licorice Pizza has the warm enveloping feeling of closing your eyes and listening as an unlikely couple tells the story of how they first met. There's a lot of "oh, and do you remember when ..." to their stories, most of which will resonate most strongly with anyone with L.A. connections and roots. The deeper, the better, it seems, because Anderson goes full James Ellroy with his L.A. homages and nods. Alana and Gary pass through the periphery of a more star-laden City of Angels, with Sean Penn as a scarcely disguised William Holden, Benny Safdie as future mayor Joel Wachs, and a highly entertaining turn from Bradley Cooper as super producer Jon Peters, coked out of his gourd.

The strange and challengingly charming awkwardness of Alana and Gary, as well as the more entertaining anecdotes, will get you past the somewhat lumpen structure. When the stories don't land, like a weirdly racist minor subplot involving Japanese restaurant entrepreneur Jerry Frick (Higgins), Licorice Pizza really depends on Haim and Hoffman who, fortunately, are great enough together and apart to even get past that age gap. Do they deserve each other's love? That's the question Anderson wants you to answer on your own.

THE MATRIX RESURRECTIONS

D: Lana Wachowski; with Keanu Reeves, Carrie-Anne Moss, Yahya Abdul-Mateen II, Jessica Henwick, Christina Ricci, Jonathan Groff, Neil Patrick Harris, Priyanka Chopra, Lambert Wilson, Jada Pinkett Smith. (R, 148 min.)

"Will we ever see him again?"
"I suspect so. Someday."
These lines about a presumably dead Neo (Reeves), spoken between the Oracle and a young Sati at the end of The Matrix Revolutions, always seemed to carry more philosophical than literal meaning. For a series of films with a certain spiritual preoccupation, they never necessarily registered as a glimpse of what the future of the franchise might hold.

Nevertheless, that quote comes to physical fruition in The Matrix Resurrections, a meta and ungainly sequel all about a culture obsessed with taking things back to where they began. Losing one half of the Wachowski duo behind the camera, this Lana solo outing is predicated on the mystery of what exactly happened between entries to find Neo where we do now: as Thomas Anderson at yet another soul-deadening corporate job, this time as a successful game designer. His most successful work? A trilogy of games about heroes Neo, Trinity, and Morpheus who fight off armies of sentinels that have subjugated the human race through a fake reality called The Matrix. Whew boy.

Like déjà vu, Neo's life unravels as he soon suspects not everything is as it appears. His therapist's reassurances of progress and casual prescription of blue pills start to feel suffocating. The strange flashes of memories that plague his thoughts start to become more tangible and familiar. He could swear he knows Tiffany (Moss), the woman he sees at the coffee shop Simulatte (har har) every day, as more than just a friendly face during his daily routine. He's been here before and, in fact, so have we.

Resurrections feels torn between these two identities: a quasi-send-up of belated sequels adhering to demands of clamoring fans, and a surprisingly straightforward (well, by Matrix standards) continuation of a story we haven't caught up with for 18 years. What begins as a tongue-in-cheek investigation of legacy, iconography, and how something like The Matrix reverberated through popular culture soon has to try and contend with being a sincere continuation of a revolutionary action trilogy. For as fun and surprising as it is with just how hard it leans into the self-aware antics, when it gets down to business it can't seem to keep up with the pressure of being an actual Matrix movie – though, admittedly, its interests seem to lie elsewhere.

Particularly striking, however, is that for a series known for its nimbly choreographed, often completely staggering action set-pieces, there's not a single one that stands up to anything within its predecessors. Sequences here are shot in claustrophobic handheld close-ups and further massacred through rapid cutting. A couple of scenes, such as a sudden train shootout, are just plain hard to follow. All the clean spatial awareness and energetic wire-fu that defined so much of the other entries has gone AWOL. If this is to make some larger point, it doesn't translate.

Though, for as many missteps are here – shoddy action, forgettable new characters, the trivial return of old ones – there's an earnest quality to its big-hearted messiness that's typical for a Wachowski movie. Brimming with cornball humor and overt sentimentality, there's something compelling within the film's unyielding commitment to its own idiosyncrasies, not to mention the emotionally cogent backbone. It may feel more like a superfluous epilogue than a truly necessary next chapter, but even at that it seems to find more interesting grounds to justify its existence than most other perpetual franchise reboots and sequels. For my money, it's hard not to value something with such inevitable divisiveness so intrinsically written within its coding.

D: Garth Jennings; with the voices of Jennings, Tori Kelly, Reese Witherspoon, Taron Egerton, Nick Kroll, Matthew McConaughey, Jennifer Saunders, Chelsea Peretti, Scarlett Johansson, Bobby Cannavale, Bono. (PG, 110 min.)

I'll be honest, going into Sing 2, I hadn't actually seen Sing. I figured I wouldn't need to have seen the original in order to see its sequel. I was right, of course. Although many of the same characters appear, Sing 2 is pretty much its own contained story. (I did watch Sing over the weekend in order to write this review with full knowledge of the franchise and, boy, was that one a stinker.)

I can happily report that the animated singing animals sequel is a hell of a lot better than the first one. Which, in the grand scheme of things, isn't saying that much. In this one, theatre-loving koala Buster Moon's (McConaughey) new show palace is going gangbusters. It's had a lot of success but Buster being Buster, it's not enough, and when he's told he'll never make it in Redshore City (essentially Vegas), Moon gets the old gang back together in order to travel there to audition for lupine Jimmy Crystal (Cannavale). They fail but one of the friends pitches this wild, never-in-a-million-years spec script they've written and Crystal loves it. He tells them to have the show ready for him in three weeks. The gang prepares the show and hi-larity ensues.

Well, maybe not hi-larity, but you get the point. Sing 2 is better than the original. I wasn't actively hate-watching this one. These jukebox musical movies are all, "Let's cram in as many hit songs as possible and hope they are songs that everyone will still love cos by the time this gets released it's 18 months later." It's fine. It's serviceable. The voice acting is good, as in no one is just sleepwalking through their lines like happens in many star-driven animated projects (I'm looking directly at you, again, What If...?). I'll be honest, I didn't even realize it was McConaughey and Johansson as Moon and punk rock porcupine Ash until I saw the credits. Not sure if that's a testament to their acting abilities (it isn't) or because I didn't really even care to figure it out (it was).

Look, does it really even matter what I say about Sing 2 in the end? I don't think so. Wanna know why? It's because you parents out there with kids at home for the next couple of weeks, you're going to be forced to take them to see it sometime over Christmas break. So all you want to know is, will you gladly be ready to eat one of your own in order to get out of the theatre faster, right? Rest assured, kiddies, the adults in your life will not want to eat you.

At least, not this time.

★ SPIDER-MAN: NO WAY HOME

D: Jon Watts; with Tom Holland, Zendaya, Marisa Tomei, Jacob Batalon, Benedict Cumberbatch. (PG-13, 148 min.)

Across all the cinematic versions of Spider-Man, there's been one truth: loss. His parents, Uncle Ben, Gwen Stacy. Being Spider-Man comes at a cost for Peter Parker, and that's really what's at the core of Spider-Man: No Way Home, the final part of this current trilogy of Sony/Marvel collaborations featuring Tom Holland as everyone's favorite friendly neighborhood hero.

Everyone's favorite? Not so much anymore. Spider-Man: Far From Home pulled the mask away, with Mysterio's final act of vengeance being the public revelation of Spidey's alter ego.

The script from Homecoming and Far From Home writers Chris McKenna and Erik Sommers isn't just about closing the current high school Spidey arc. It digs deep into Spidey's long and torturous history with magic in the comics, which never ends well (just search "Spider-Man: One More Day" and brace for impact). More importantly, it harkens back to the most important moment in the MCU: at the end of Iron Man, when Tony Stark stands before the world's press and proclaims, "I am Iron Man." In that moment, he made public superheroes part of the MCU, and without that we wouldn't have Rogers: The Musical or Kate Bishop fangirling over Hawkeye right now.

But being recognizable, well, if you're a tech billionaire, that's one thing. If you're a broke kid from Queens hoping to get into MIT, and suddenly everyone knows who you are, and half the world thinks you murdered the greatest hero ever, life gets complex for you and your family (Tomei returning as Aunt May), your best friend (Batalon as Ned Leeds), and your girlfriend (Zendaya as the MCU's MJ). So of course his request to an exasperated Dr. Strange (Cumberbatch) to cast a spell to make everyone forget who Peter Parker is causes chaos of the multidimensional kind as a plethora of familiar villains break through the walls of reality.

Marvel has always been about setting up big crossovers, but if you thought 11 years and 23 films of the Infinity Saga was impressive, then No Way Home's reckless decision to pull together all three iterations of the recent cinematic Spider-Man – the Maguire/Raimi trilogy, Andrew Garfield's studio-curtailed miniverse, and the Holland/MCU crossover – is absurdly bold. Yet that's what No Way Home does. It weaves the last remaining threads of this particular tangled web, and starts a new adventure for Spidey, one that cannot ignore that history of loss.

What's remarkable is that it does so without feeling like a rip-off of the similarly themed Spider-Man: Into the Spider-Verse. Watts has such a smooth grasp on the nervous energy that makes his version of Spider-Man's New York tick that it doesn't feel overcrowded, or like soulless fan service, when veteran villains of other Spideys like Molina's Doctor Octopus and Dafoe's Green Goblin come crashing into this reality. That's when McKenna and Sommers' script really starts to shine, balancing the big CG set-pieces that are MCU fodder with a real understanding of those characters. There's no soft reboot in this unnamed reunion of the Sinister Six. They were complicated characters, often at war with themselves as much with ol' Web Head, and No Way Home giving Dafoe another chance to get inside the tortured skin of poor Norman Osborn would justify its existence.

But it all comes back to Holland's Peter Parker: the gawky teenager still learning all the clauses of that great power, great responsibility contract he involuntarily signed. So often in these big multi-villain events, the hero gets swallowed up, but here he defines the film. If this really is Holland's last outing, then he leaves having kept true to the spirit of his Spidey. And if he does return, he's perfectly positioned him for the next phase, the post-high school Parker that's a lot of people's definitional Petey. Count on that, true believers.

★ SWAN SONG

D: Benjamin Clearly; with Mahershala Ali, Naomie Harris, Glenn Close, Awkwafina, Adam Beach. (R, 116 min.)

Mahershala Ali is such a movie star it almost isn't fair. Watching an actor of such effortless charm, nuanced emotional precision, and tangible physicality is a gift – one that he affords to Swan Song, a downbeat, somewhat sleepy sci-fi yarn about the people we love and the things we do to shield them from pain.

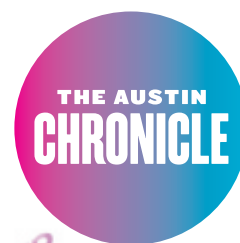

Ali is Cameron Turner, an illustrator in a vision of the near future that's populated with so much sleek and glossy tech that it seems to suggest original movies such as this are only the first step in Apple's master plan for world domination past cellphones and watches. He lives for his family; his wife Poppy (Harris) and son Cory (Rey) are the two constants that compel him to make it out of bed every day, which is exactly why he can't work up the nerve to approach them with the news that he's dying. Whatever illness is eating away inside of him is left unclear, but technology can't fix it – at least not as far as keeping him truly alive. But a visit with one Dr. Eve Scott (Close) at her remote headquarters presents a potential solution to save his family the agony of his loss: a clone, complete with an entire lifetime's worth of memories and experiences that can replace him without his family's knowledge. Cameron recognizes the quietly disconcerting nature of the idea and it provokes an emotional and ethical evaluation of, broadly, the meaning of life. Is it wrong to lie to his family to save them from suffering? Can he even internally deal with a version of him that's not him going home to take care of his family?

It's a tricky circumstance that the film takes great care to allow Cameron to grapple with sensitively. This is an extremely quiet, moody, and mostly humorless drama that handles its protagonist's conflict with an introspective delicacy. Cameron knows that he ultimately wants to spare his family from anguish, but watching this fringe experiment come to life just puts him under further distress. Watching Ali act against himself as Cameron and his double come face-to-face is at once stirring and unnerving. The movie magic of having an actor as multiple performers in a scene is downplayed; in a film that largely limits its futuristic world to background dressing, choosing instead to zero in on the interiority of its characters, this clone is presented with a sort of matter-of-fact naturalism. Both versions of Cameron are allowed to exist with an air of compassion for their situations. Clone Cameron didn't ask to be given life and is now at the behest of the man after whom he was modeled. Cameron Prime can't get over the fundamental belief that this is a different man that will go home to his family, while he spends his final days watching him take over his life. Another woman on the complex in the same situation, Kate (Awkwafina), is filled with a heavy resentment and depression over the choice she's made that doesn't exactly quell his anxieties.

Cameron's journey is a complicated and poignant one, though the muted aura that maintains a rigid hush over scenes keeps the viewer at something of an emotional detachment. This never makes the final soul-stirring crescendo one may hope it would. Instead, its interests lie in the quiet soberness of standing at death's door and wrestling with how far is too far when protecting those you love from the heartbreak of being human.

Here's some of what's happening in Austin's culinary scene, as wrangled from numerous PR releases, words on the digital street, and even the occasional (verified) IRL eavesdroppings.

By now you probably know that Texas barbecue legend John Mueller (of Austin's John Mueller BBQ and more recently Dallas' Hutchins BBQ fame) has died. The celebrated – and even somewhat notorious – pitmaster, brother to la Barbecue's LeAnn Mueller, was 52.

In other miserable news, memories of happy gatherings and the best rabbit & dumplings we ever had – the only rabbit & dumplings we ever had – will be tinged with sadness now that Contigo is closing after a 10-year run of culinary excellence and community enrichment. The neighborhood stalwart of chillaxing and gastronomy – passionately run by Ben Edgerton, Dana Curley, and chef Andrew Wiseheart – opened in 2011 at 2027 Anchor Ln. and quickly became known for its delicious food, innovative drinks menu, and patio-abetted laid-back vibe. And now, damn it all, Contigo's last day of service will be Thu., Dec. 30, so do pay a visit while you still can...

More brightly, the Wine & Food Foundation, buoyed by their recent 35th Rare & Fine Wine Auction, has donated $6,000 to Austin Pets Alive! this season... And, in further joy, there's Christmas Day and the fact that Heidi Garbo's new brick-and-mortar place at 12709 N. MoPac, already up and doing a brisk business in lobster rolls and oysters and all manner of succulent seafood dishes, will be open on that day, too – serving up plate after plate of fresh, ocean-borne goodness accompanied by the best cocktails (curated by Josh Loving of Small Victory, no less) to wash it all down with. Click 'em at garboslobsteratx.com... And Tex-Mex powerhouse Trudy's is set to debut their newest restaurant concept, Trudy's Del Mar, on Wed., Dec. 29, in the former South Congress Cafe location at 1600 S. Congress. This venue's focus, honed by chef Julian Rodarte, will be on seafood dishes inspired by traditional recipes from Mexican coastal living, which is enticement enough. But! Trudy's is no dummy: You'll still be able to get the previous South Congress Cafe brunch menu that includes sweet potato beignets, carrot cake French toast, and migas... And Kura Sushi, that beloved conveyor-belt joint of Japanese noms in the Crescent, is offering party trays of assorted nigiri and osechi-style sushi rolls as holiday specials for takeout or delivery only – for $29 each, while supplies last...

Oooh, that golden fried chicken at Old Thousand

Now eat as well as you can, tip like it's going out of style, and FFS watch out for that lousy Omicron stuff.

NEW YEAR'S EVE DINING & DRINKING

So iconic: the long-bearded Father Time and that baby, year after year, illustrating our journey toward entropy. And, meanwhile, where's the mother? Stuck toiling away in the kitchen, as usual, so the testosterone-addled can indulge in their endless games of conquest and control, right? Well. In order to properly and delightfully fuel the beginning of a potentially patriarchy-smashing year, here's some dining recommendations that'll treat you right. And of course, see our website for even more.

AVIARY WINE & KITCHEN Sip and savor the best of the elevated grape with Aviary, as chef Andre Molina and team present a prix fixe menu with six courses and six wine pairings. Indulge yourself and your lucky date with dishes that feature oysters with buttermilk caviar, shrimp tamales, boneless short rib with black garlic, and more – in this funky stylish spot south of the river. Fri., Dec. 31, 6 & 8pm. Aviary Wine & Kitchen, 2110 S. Lamar, Ste. C, 512/916-4445. aviarywinekitchen.com.

DRINK.WELL The beloved neighborhood bar welcomes guests back in person for New Year's Eve, with an intimate, lively celebration without the wild crowds or overly fussy logistics. The soiree kicks off at 3pm with delicious food and champagne and celebratory libations until after the clock strikes midnight in the new year. And then, Drink.Well will be open on

EBERLY Eberly is hosting a galactic-odeo-themed party, where you'll explore the cosmos-themed dance floor with interstellar clouds, performances, and a special display of the rooftop turned wild wild West with a mechanical bull. (Reckon that's a sort of space cowboy, then? And will some people call you Maurice?) Chef Jo Chan will be making brisket, borracho beans, and Mexican corn; chef Sarah Seghi will serve space-themed desserts. The evening also includes sets by DJ Gatsby, retro arcade games and photo booth, mid-night champagne toast, and a costume contest at 1am. Fri., Dec. 31, 8pm-closing. Eberly, 615 S. Lamar, 512/916-9000. $125. eberlyaustin.com.

EMMER & RYE To speak of what chef Kevin Fink and his team are preparing for their acclaimed eatery's year-end feast is to speak the language of angels with a culinary fetish. Oysters, fennel mignonette, blue crab, salsa matcha, red snapper, dry-aged wagyu beef tartare, burnt-edge lasagna, paddlefish caviar, smoked mushroom custard, wagyu rib-eye, egg amino tart, and more – composing a 10-course lesson in what delicious means. Fri., Dec. 31. Emmer & Rye, 51 Rainey #110, 512/366-5530. $125 per person ($200, with wine pairings). emmerandrye.com.

HESTIA Hestia, the goddess of fire, must weep tears of joy to know that her name's invoked by this epicenter of live-fire cooking. Hell, we've seen enough mortal citizens weeping such tears when dining in the place, and now the year's terminus brings a 10-course wonderment featuring tomato tart, mille-feuille, Norwegian crab, wagyu rib-eye, roasted beets, grilled halibut, chocolate truffles, and more. After all that and excellent wine pairings, probably not a dry eye in the place. Fri., Dec. 31. Hestia, 607 W. Third, 512/333-0737. $195 per person ($295, with wine pairings). hestiaaustin.com.

IL BRUTTO This Eastside neighborhood Italian spot will treat you right as 2021 gives way to 2022, with house-made pastas, wood-fired pizzas, and an extensive wine list. Bonus: fire pits on the patio and live jazz by Django Foxtrot (7-10pm). And, after dinner, there's a city's worth of dive bars to get lost among until the new year dawns. Fri., Dec. 31, 4-10pm. Il Brutto, 1601 E. Sixth, 512/580-8779. ilbruttoaustin.com.

LA CONDESA Get a healthy leg up on your resolution to eat more greens, with La Condesa's all-vegetarian NYE specials menu – featuring charred broccoli tamales with garlic confit, grilled sweet potato “steak,” and café con leche with Oaxacan double cream. And, look, carnivores: Their regular menu will also be available the whole night. Fri., Dec. 31. La Condesa, 400 W. Second, Ste. A, 512/499-0300. lacondesa.com.

LENOIR Lenoir also celebrates their 10-year anniversary on this night, bidding 2021 adieu with a feast of 10 courses by chef Todd Duplechan accompanied with natural wine pairings. Dishes include osetra caviar on tuna marrow; crab “pearls” with poached roselle flowers; quail egg tamal with braised foraged mushrooms and shaved white truffle; sorghum-smoked beef rib-eye cap with bone marrow dumplings; and more. And they've fancied up the outdoor heated wine garden into a lounge – with a complimentary warm beverage for the first seating and a champagne toast at midnight for the second. Fri., Dec. 31, 5pm & 8:30pm. Lenoir, 1807 S. First, 512/215-9778. $225 per person ($400, with wine pairings). lenoirrestaurant.com.

OLD THOUSAND Old Thousand, that popular bastion of “Dope Chinese” noms, is offering a bucket of golden fried chicken with ginger scallion salt, a bottle of bubbles, and sides for dine-in or takeout at both locations on New Year's Eve. And, listen: That's just the NYE special; their amazing regular menu will also be available. (Yes, that does mean, omg, that brisket fried rice.) Fri., Dec. 31. Old Thousand, 1000 E. 11th #150, 737/222-6637. $80-125. oldthousandatx.com.

SWAY Oh, we're missing that Sway on South First; luckily, Westlake's Bee Caves Road still, y'might say, holds Sway. And this location is bright with splendor as a setting for caviar-topped oysters, waterfall beef tartare, aged rib-eye, a whole Thai fish, and more. Say good riddance to a problematic year in this place where even the charcuterie board – foie gras torchon, rabbit rillet, northern Thai sausages, fruit jam & yuzu curd, miso aged tofu, coconut cheese, pickles & crackers – is like something out of your fanciest dreams. Fri., Dec. 31. Sway, 3437 Bee Caves Rd., West Lake Hills, 512/326-1999. swaythai.com.

UCHIKO Here's Uchi's sibling venue, with another 10-course omakase dinner for the very end of this year and the very beginning of the next one. Here's Uchiko, with a diversity of elevated freshness – bluefin tuna, lobster, caviar, A5 wagyu beef, venison, and more – also capped by a champagne toast at midnight. Fri. & Sat., Dec. 31 & Jan. 1. Uchiko, 4200 N. Lamar, 512/916-4808. $300 for two people. uchikoaustin.com.

UCHI Here's a 10-course omakase dinner for the very end of this year and the very beginning of the next one. Here's Uchi, Austin's award-winning Japanese restaurant, with an unsurpassed array of delights – terrine, tekka, ham dumpling, nigiri, mushroom gelato, bluefin crudo, king crab, and more – capped by a champagne toast at midnight. Fri. & Sat., Dec. 31 & Jan. 1. Uchi, 801 S. Lamar, 512/916-4808. $275 for two people (bev pairings, $50 per person). uchiaustin.com.

WALTON'S Walton's Fancy & Staple has put together a New Year's Day brunch that can banish all the hullabaloo of the year before and serve up to 10 hungry people – with maple bourbon glazed ham, French toast casserole, black-eyed peas, collard greens, vanilla cheesecake, a mimosa kit, and more. Note: Order by Dec. 28 for pick-up on Dec. 30 or 31. Walton's Fancy and Staple, 609 W. Sixth, 512/542-3380. waltonsfancyandstaple.com.

Editor's note: This is the third chapter in a serialized history of Austin's punk culture, written by veteran journalist Tim Stegall. Chapter 1, documenting how a collaboration between Roky Erickson and Doug Sahm spurred this primal strain of rock & roll, and Chapter 2, delineating the pre-punk world of glam rock, ran in 2019 and 2020, respectively. Over the Chronicle's next three issues, Stegall takes us from Austin's first punk band to the big-bang event of the Sex Pistols playing Randy's Rodeo.

“No Willie, Waylon, or the Armadillo in 1977!!!” The Punk Beast Begins to Stir in Austin

A nascent scene takes shape BY TIM STEGALL

“I JUST WANTED TO PLAY THAT MUSIC!”

“No Elvis, Beatles, or the Rolling Stones/In 1977!!!” roared the Clash, London’s No. 2 Great Punk Hope, from the B-side of their debut 45, “White Riot.”

Seemingly overnight, every major metropolis on Earth boasted at least 10 local bands singing a variation on that chorus. Except Austin.

Guitarist Sterling Morrison of New York’s Velvet Underground spent most of the Seventies in UT’s medieval literature graduate studies program, working as a teaching assistant. In the Sixties, the VU taught future punks the value of distortion, primal rhythms, and songs about drugs, decadence, and urban decay. Morrison left the band midtour at Houston’s airport in 1971, sick of Lou Reed’s machinations. He eventually joined Austin party band the Bizarros. But as drummer Bill Bentley puts it, they “weren’t protopunk.”

“We made Sterling learn some blues, and early rock, which he already knew,” he recalled. “But it was all so much fun, and we drank so much, nothing made much sense anyway – musically or otherwise.”

Bentley’s day job as counterculture biweekly The Austin Sun’s music editor afforded him a panoramic view of the town’s musical landscape. While the Armadillo’s progressive country sound still dominated, the blues crying from Clifford Antone’s eponymous club excited him more. The Fabulous Thunderbirds were the house band, sharpening their Chicago-esque chops onstage with greats like Muddy Waters and Bobby Blue Bland.

Local glam burned down with Mother Earth’s original Lamar location. Dicks singer Gary Floyd, relocated here from Palestine, Texas, in 1974, thinks glam may’ve been a little too pretentious for Austin.

“People had to work and make money – that’s Texas,” he says. “People went out all night, then worked the next day, then started all over again. You could dress up a little bit, but people wanna be real. And in the summertime, it’s too damned hot to dress in a costume! Glam might not’ve been real enough. It’s why country music caught on here – they want the real thing.

“Austin is a place where they want you to be real.”

In 1975, Roky Erickson unleashed his horrorpunk act at the Ritz at roughly the same moment the Ramones ruled CBGB. L.A. proto-punks the Imperial Dogs and Berlin Brats played scattered gigs, in one of the few U.S. cities to embrace both the New York Dolls and the Stooges. Art-damaged Cleveland garage-ists Rocket From the Tombs split, spawning an artier half called Pere Ubu and a Stooogie half named Frankenstein, the latter a year away from becoming the Dead Boys. Across the Atlantic, the Sex Pistols gate-crashed their first London art college gigs. (“Yeah, we’re the opening act, mate!”) Radio Birdman and the Saints played similar high-speed Stooogie-rock from opposite ends of the Australian continent.

None of these bands were aware anyone else in this world also hated everything about the Seventies. They had to make this noise themselves.

San Antonio’s local delinquent rock & rollers emerged in 1974 – the Vamps. They were led by brothers Frank and Joe Pugliese, relocated from Steelton, Pa., in 1965 when their father’s civil service job shifted to Kelly Air Force Base. Six-foot-6-inch Frank fronted the band like a cross between Iggy Pop and early Mick Jagger placed on a stretch rack. The younger Joe slammed drums.

"We went through a billion guitar players and bass players," sighs Joe. "At first, we called ourselves Riff Raff, then we were Chatterbox. Then in '75, we landed on the Vamps, and kept that name until we broke up in 1980.

"Basically, we became a band because no one else was playing music we liked. We were in the heavy metal capital of Texas, but we liked the Dolls, the Stones, and the Stooges. So we became a band playing that material. We played a lot of Iggy, a lot of Lou Reed and Velvet Underground, and at one time we worked up the entire first New York Dolls album."

"We did a lot of the same songs we do in the Sons of Hercules," adds Frank, singer with that San Antonio garage-punk institution since 1990. "We never really found the right guys to play these songs, back then. Some wanted to be in the Beatles, some wanted to be heavy metal. It was pretty bad."

"Anybody that was willing to take the time to rehearse with us? We'd take 'em!" laughs Joe. "Most of 'em had never heard of the Dolls or Velvet Underground. But it was easy enough. We exposed them to it. Then they liked it 'cause you could dance to it, it had a good beat. Most of the time, we'd need a guitar player, and they'd come over and say, 'Well, I like the Scorpions.' And I'd say, 'Well, if you're into the Scorpions, then you can play D and E!'"

In 1976, bands like the Vamps looked around, saw others in far-flung burghs peering back from the pages of Rock Scene and Creem magazine, and realized they weren't alone. Someone – maybe Legs McNeil at pioneering NYC fanzine Punk, perhaps Melody Maker journalist Caroline Coon in the UK – called it "punk rock." Creem writer Dave Marsh coined the term in 1969 to describe Farfisa-driven garage-ites Question Mark and the Mysterians, of 96 Tears fame. Fellow scribe (and future Patti Smith Group guitarist) Lenny Kaye then applied it to the groups featured on his hugely influential 1972 retrospective of Sixties garage sounds, Nuggets.

"Exactly," Frank affirms. "I didn't know punk from spunk! I just wanted to play that music!"

"I DIDN'T THINK, 'OH, I CAN DO THIS.'"

Word of punk spread globally in summer 1977. June 25, NBC's late-night news magazine Weekend ran "The New Elizabethans," a report on England's sensationalized scene. "It is the newest music from the country where Handel composed 'The Messiah,'" intoned anchor Lloyd Dobyns, the screen filling with images of Eddie & the Hot Rods seething through Bob Seger's "Get Out of Denver." "This is punk rock, and its purpose, one observer says, is to promote violence, sex, and destruction – in that order." Visions of safety-pinned kids walking down the King's Road and pogoers ripping down ceiling tiles and electrical wiring to the Damned followed. Sex Pistols manager Malcolm McLaren pontificated from a taxi cab's backseat: "We are, at the moment, in a country that is economically depressed. When you've got 60% of these kids out of work or sitting around or hanging out in the streets, without music that they feel can capture their imagination and inspire them to go forth, you have a whole force that is basically with very little future."

July 11, Time magazine splashed punk across two pages, headlined "Anthems of the Blank Generation." "The music aims for the gut," read the anonymous copy. "Even compared with the more elemental stylings of 1950s rock 'n' roll which it closely resembles, punk rock is a primal scream. The music comes in fast, short bursts of buzz and blast. Some groups have but two or three chord changes at their disposal, occasionally less: Last week at CBGB, a fledgling group set several unofficial records for length of time played without changing chords at all." Surrounding the jaundiced prose: images of Johnny Rotten flipping off the camera, Dead Boys vocalist Stiv Bators writhing on a floor, L.A. art brutarians the Weirdos, and some joker in a suit made of a parachute and raw cuts of meat.

Surely some Austinites at this historical moment were screaming, "No Willie, Waylon, or the Armadillo ... in 1977!!!" Well ...

"Iggy [Pop] played the Armadillo with the Sales brothers [Tony and Hunt, sons of Fifties pie-in-face comedian Soupy Sales] in 1977," emails Jesse Sublett, then at loose ends after playing last-gasp glamsters Jelly Roll's final gigs at the year's beginning. "That was a big pre-punk moment. If you were there – and it was a very small but ecstatic crowd – you would have recognized people who had been at the Runaways, the Tubes, and Roxy Music, all within 1975–77, and then you would have seen many of the same people at Raul's in '78."

Glam/metal-damaged teen combo the Runaways, L.A.'s Joan Jett-led great proto-punk hope, made their Austin debut Feb. 15, 1977. R&B greats the Womack Brothers opened. NYC's Ramones played Armadillo World HQ on Thursday, July 14, 1977. They essentially codified the hyperadrenalized tempos, chainsaw guitars, and leather jacket couture that would characterize punk, and acted as the movement's Johnny Appleseeds most everywhere. But while Austin's punks-to-be may've been excited by "Cherry Bomb" and "Blitzkrieg Bop," it hardly seemed to dawn on anyone that this new music could happen here.

This seems odd, considering the catalytic effect the Ramones had most places. It was similar to Elvis Presley barnstorming the South in 1955, leaving behind a trail of greasy-haired hillbillies boppin' the blues, or the Yardbirds' blitzkrieg of the entirety of America 10 years later. As manager Giorgio Gomelsky once exclaimed, they returned after six months to find "every local band was the Yardbirds!"

"Dee Dee Ramone would walk up to the front of the stage," Floyd recalls of the Ramones' Armadillo gig. "Me and my friend would put our hands on his shoes. He looked at us like, 'Okay, that's weird. Must be queers.' But he kept coming back, and we kept rubbing his feet."

"At that time, I was only listening to blues stuff. I couldn't listen to all the other shit anymore, like the Moody Blues or that kinda thing. The Ramones were new and exciting, it was the new sound. The Ramones and the Pistols went into heavy rotation with me for a long time."

Future Huns guitarist John Burton was at the Ramones and Runaways shows, as well as the Ramones' July 18 San Antonio gig at converted bowling alley Randy's Rodeo.

"People just pulled chairs up in front of the stage," marvels Burton. "I was sitting in the front row, with no room between the stage and the chair."

A native of Schertz, Texas, then studying at San Marcos' Southwest Texas State University, Burton was a teenage hard rocker who'd played drums in junior high cover bands before getting distracted by cars and motorcycles. He also "devoured" New York Rocker and Rock Scene.

"Particularly in 1974, Rock Scene covered Wayne County, the New York Dolls, the Ramones – and Kiss! They were part of that pool of bands. To me, the Ramones were hard rock, just in a more innovative way. They still had the wall of Marshalls, but they had songs that were inspired by 1950s rock with their own spin: two to three minutes, short, to-the-point, fast, loud. That was the first punk I saw, but I didn't think, 'Oh, I can do this.'"

"The main takeaway for me was, 'Oh, I don't have to play like Jeff Beck. I don't have to woodshed five years before I can really do this well.' It took away a lot of the need to be a virtuoso and the gender bias. You didn't have to be extreme. You could still have a shag haircut and be punk."

FUTURE GO-GO'S BASSIST KATHY VALENTINE, A MEMBER OF 1977 AUSTIN ACT THE VIOLATORS, ON THE SENSE OF EMPOWERMENT THAT PUNK GAVE HER

"They were almost an act," muses Bill Bentley. "They were a visual thing – they all dressed alike, they had the same name. It was almost a routine as much as it was musical. But if you didn't look at them and listened to the music, it was mind-blowing. But it was almost comedic. People didn't take them seriously – and that might be why they didn't inspire people in Austin to do it themselves."

"The music seemed a little familiar," recalls Big Boys bassist Chris Gates of his first exposure to the Ramones. "There was that Sixties soul element, but it was the fastness of it! My head couldn't get around it. It just seemed funny. I didn't know what to think of it. It was so far outside of anything I had experienced."

Gates was a skateboarding longhair learning to play guitar to Ted Nugent records. He loved Deep Purple, Black Sabbath, and Aerosmith, but also early Seventies underground sounds – Bowie, the Stooges, the Dolls.

"To me, a lot of rock by 1977 was getting pretty stale," he says. "I was already looking for something else. Rock radio was inundated with Journey and Styx. It was getting tedious."

London's outrage, the Sex Pistols, became internationally notorious by summer 1977. It seemed the Ramones would be punk's Beatles, and the Pistols its Rolling Stones. Everything lead snarler Johnny Rotten, bassist Sid Vicious, guitarist Steve Jones, and drummer Paul Cook touched was destined to offend everyone in their path, until they could never play a show in their homeland. Their vitriolic rock & roll and nasty manner especially produced local converts, amongst Austinites sick of slick Seventies rock.

"Punks were out there," notes Sublett. "But it took the Sex Pistols to wake everyone up or something."

SANCTUM SANCTORUM

If Austin's punks-in-the-making received the news, it wasn't from alarmist news magazine stories or television reports. Blame the import bins of Inner Sanctum Records. It initially opened August 28, 1970, by UT student Joe Bryson, out of a ramshackle West 24th and Rio Grande location for a down-on-its-luck shop called Phil's Record Store. It soon moved to a large old house up the road at 504 W. 24th. Among their neighboring businesses in that building: The Texas Observer's initial offices. On the staff: a young Molly Ivins.

Over time, Bryson assembled a crew of musical aficionados whose expertise he'd rely on, like store manager James "Cowboy" Cooper and Richard Dorsett, eventually the jazz buyer. The store specialized in cosmic cowboy sounds, but they stocked everything. Pioneering the sale of used records – plus their controversial (among major labels, at least) practice of renting records at $1/day – helped make Inner Sanctum one of America's most influential independent record retailers. It was certainly Austin's most popular record store.

"You could find things at Inner Sanctum that you would not find anywhere," says

Bryson, these days a prominent local realtor. “We had a really unique selection. Four years into it, we broke our first million dollars in annual sales, starting from a $3,600 investment.”

“Everybody would just go there and talk about music,” says Bentley. “We didn’t even buy records – we just talked about ’em! You’d buy a beer at Les Amis, then go in and talk about music.”

The store grew, eventually taking over 504’s entire bottom story and employing a staff of 16.

“I ordered the imports,” says Neil Ruttenberg, another San Antonio native who joined the staff in 1976. “I was into prog rock. I was an avid reader of New Musical Express and Melody Maker. That was the only way to get any information, other than New York Rocker, which came out in ’76. But there were all these pre-punk bands like the MC5 and the Stooges who were putting out records, and there was also pub rock that was kind of a bridge. You had all these people like Nick Lowe and Graham Parker who sort of fertilized the punk scene.”

“All this music was being funneled through our shop. We were an independent record store – it wasn’t Discount Records, it wasn’t Record Town. It wasn’t corporate. We could bring in whatever we wanted. Joe never cared about that. We were an amalgam of every kind of music, depending on who was working. Cowboy would always play country. Richard Dorsett and I would play the Dolls and the Stooges. Personalities drove what you heard in the store, and we were terrible snobs. But that was part of the charm of the store. Somebody would walk up with a record, and I’d go, ‘You don’t wanna buy that! You wanna buy this!’”

Come 1977, what Ruttenberg and Dorsett increasingly wanted you to buy was punk rock. They stocked all the latest U.S. indie releases and British imports, plus those UK rock weeklies and Xeroxed fanzines furiously documenting this new music – Punk out of NYC, Sniffing Glue from London, sometimes the West Coast’s Slash and Search and Destroy.

“We were forming the musical interests of these subcultures by doing this. The whole thing started from singles, because nobody had albums out yet, except for the Ramones and the Clash and eventually the Sex Pistols. Everything was singles. So we would get singles from New York and England, and I was constantly picking through Melody Maker and New York Rocker, always looking for something new. I was bringing in a ton of stuff. Joe wasn’t real happy about it, because sometimes things didn’t sell.”

“We had all the imported punk singles,” says employee Eddie Muñoz, also freshly un-Jelly Rolled like his pal Sublett. “I’d see the kids coming in from UT and looking through the shit, wondering when this record was coming out. Back then, you had to look at the Jem Records catalog to see what was scheduled to be released.” Muñoz was eventually joined at Inner Sanctum by Will Sharp, another San Antonian who eventually managed the Next.

As touring punk acts began playing the Armadillo, they'd stop in Inner Sanctum for an in-store, signing records or even playing a brief set as the registers rang and the beer flowed. That fall, Robert Gordon – an Elvis-alike who'd begun with CBGB act the Tuff Darts before co-leading a rockabilly revivalist outfit with genuine Fifties rock guitar legend Link Wray – crammed people into the shop. An Elvis Costello look-alike contest promoted the release of his debut album, My Aim Is True. When KLBJ refused to play the Clash's first LP, Bryson bought a block of airtime for Inner Sanctum spots, went next door to sister station KHFT's production studio, and began the ads by announcing, "At this point in time, you will not hear this music on this radio station." Then proceeded to play a minute of "Janie Jones."

The Ramones did three Inner Sanctum in-stores over time. Once, Dee Dee Ramone ordered five Bovine Specials – "two quarter-pound hamburger patties they put tomatoes and grilled onions and cheese inside, the chicken kiev of hamburgers," according to Bryson – from the Mad Dog & Beans burger stand next door during the course of the signing.

"He had 5 pounds of ground beef in his belly," laughs Bryson. "He looked like a damned pregnant totem pole!"

Dee Dee's feeding frenzy made him forget his stage clothes in a paper bag in Inner Sanctum's closet. Tour manager Monte Melnick called from El Paso, asking if the store could send them to the tour's next stop, Albuquerque.

"Neil laid his clothes out in a record box," grins Bryson. "Then we ordered a Bovine Special next door, laid it on top, sealed the box and shipped it."

MOVING VIOLATIONS

"The scene was stale," drawls Carla Olson, still leading the Textones from Los Angeles, as she has since the days when 213 was the city's only area code. "It wasn't happening. Suddenly things started changing, and people started saying, 'Y'know, I'm not doing these four sets of radio songs anymore.'"

Well, certainly. Who wants to play four sets per night of "Disco Duck" and "Afternoon Delight"?

Olson grew up middle class, attending Reagan High School until she was thrown out for not wearing a bra. ("And believe me, that wasn't an issue, because I looked like your kid brother!") Her parents bought her first acoustic guitar with S&H Green Stamps. Seeing the Beatles on The Ed Sullivan Show changed her direction: "I didn't wanna play folk guitar – I wanted to be in a band!" By 1976, she had played in some glam-ish bands – Silver Clouds, Warp Factor 5 – with shag-cut boyfriend Muñoz, who could twist a fretboard with rare strength and agility.

Muñoz spent much of the summer in Los Angeles, absorbing events at the Masque. Opened by Scottish immigrant Brendan Mullen in the basement of the Pussycat porn theatre on Hollywood Boulevard, the cheap rehearsal space soon became Hollywood's punk palace. Blasting the graffiti off its walls: the Germs, X, the Weirdos, the Controllers, the Bags, the Alley Cats, and many other bands with a definitive article starting their name, like a vicious nihilist parody of Sixties British Invasion bands. Muñoz saw most of those, plus out-of-towners like Blondie and the Ramones, and San Francisco's Avengers. He befriended scenesters like Phast Phreddie Patterson, founder of proto-punk zine Backdoor Man, and Chris Desjardins, record reviewer for Slash and leader of the Flesh Eaters.

"There was no culture shock," he claims. "Those bands were all fucking amazing, even though some of those acts were more challenged on the artistic level."

Muñoz returned to Austin enthusiastic about his experiences. He carried back several punk imports and local L.A. 45s, raving to Sublett.

"It took a few months of absorbing the idea, but the epiphany came quick," he says. "Jesse smiled big time and said, 'Let's do this!'"

Meanwhile, Olson visited friend Toni Laumer in England that fall, as did Lois Richwine, another San Antonian. Also visiting Britain: Kathy Valentine, the teenage guitarist Muñoz encountered while rooming with her British mom. All three were blown away by the industrial grinder that the Sex Pistols, Clash, Damned, etc. applied to English rock. Valentine even auditioned for and joined a newly formed Runaways-style punk/hard rock amalgam, Painted Lady.

"Kathy, to me, was one of those points of light in the cosmos that makes shit happen," says Muñoz. "Of course I was too young to realize that until a while back. She is the reason I grew to be the musician I am. She kicked my ass on guitar until she showed me how to play 'Hideaway' by Freddie King."

Muñoz also recalls Valentine taking piano lessons from a Greenbriar School associate, acknowledged in her recent memoir All I Ever Wanted. They gave her a sense of musical theory and sight-reading she passed on in sessions around the family piano. She apparently also taught him a crucial chord change in another blues standard, "Keys to the Highway."

"I had learned the Eric Clapton version in 1974," he recalls. "She had her own take on it, maybe from hanging out with one of the blues guys in '77-'78. She had discovered a chord change that wasn't on the Eric version."

"Actually, maybe Carla had something to do with that, too. Carla knew those Freddie King turnarounds that I struggled with. Carla had a great handle on blues changes, the cool ones. Carla is pretty much ground zero for improving my guitar playing in our relationship – and, by osmosis, Kathy's too. Kathy was rough, but she had something."

In London, Olson and Richwine intimately viewed the goings-on at Stiff Records, via Laumer's relationship with co-founder Jake Riviera. A rock impresario christened Andrew Jakeman, he'd co-founded Stiff with Dave Robinson in 1976, off a loan from Lee Brilleaux, singer for Dr. Feelgood, the vicious, Valentine's book mentions no such encounter. But in person, she paraphrases the sense of empowerment punk gave her, underlined in its pages.

A mysterious ailment led to Painted Lady – soon renamed Girlschool – replacing her with Kelly Johnson. Undaunted, Valentine returned home bent on starting a punk band. She was already tight with Marilyn Dean, a drummer who shared her Joan Jett fashion sense – razor-shag/heavy Kohl/leather jacket. Muñoz mentioned his girlfriend's musical gifts, to Valentine's shock. Olson was game, once he got her on the phone with Valentine. When no suitable female bassists were found, Sublett was approached. Meet the Violators – Austin's first punk band.

Rehearsals commenced in October, according to Sublett's Never the Same Again, consisting of originals he and Valentine had lying around. They balanced out the repertoire with covers of still-relevant Sixties rockers – Stones, Yardbirds, Kinks, 13th Floor Elevators, and Velvet Underground – and current punk/New Wave luminaries: Pistols/Damned/Costello/Lowe.

"Carla and Kathy did most of the singing," he continues. "The band was rough, but way ahead of its time for Austin."

Richwine returned to San Antonio around Thanksgiving, running into Olson and Valentine again and being struck by their chemistry. Valentine stayed in touch, attempting to coerce her into relocating by matchmaking her with the Violators' bassist.

Muñoz, meantime, kept showing up to their practices, acting as an ad hoc roadie – changing strings, adjusting the PA, etc. Once on a break, Muñoz revved up James Williamson's immortal two-chord riff to Iggy and the Stooges' "Search and Destroy" on Valentine's '63 Fender Strat. Sublett naturally fell in on bass, as Dean pounded the beat for all she was worth. Grins ensued all around. The three tried two more songs the next night. Sublett was enjoying the power trio format. Muñoz said he knew of a drummer from Beeville who was managing a sandwich shop next to the Continental Club on Congress: "A little Keith Moon, a whole lot of Charlie Watts, he said. Sounded good to me." Billy Blackmon indicated his interest, but they'd have to play a few songs by his favorite band, the Kinks. Sublett and Muñoz readily agreed. Meet the Skunks – Austin's second-ever punk band.

The Violators debuted late '77, opening for Austin jokesters Uranium Savages. For their trouble, they had to suffer singer Kerry Awn's Violators jokes during his band's set. Mother Earth at its new Riverside location followed. They fared poorly, despite the club's usual cover bands sneaking Sex Pistols and Ramones songs into their sets by now. This clearly was not going to work. The band needed a venue. Dean had been dating Little Stevie Wilton, drummer of the prog-ish Project Terror, who'd been gigging regularly at a rock club called Gemini's at 2610 Guadalupe, across from the UT campus. By the time Olson and Valentine went in seeking a booking, former Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant manager Roy Gomez had purchased the property, renaming it Raul's. His friend Joseph Gonzalez managed the club, intended as a Tejano music showcase, and Bobby Morales was the bouncer. Gomez and Gonzalez opted to take a chance, booking the Violators and the Skunks into Raul's for mid-January.

"The pizza was good, and you could get $1.25 pitchers of beer," says Olson. "Bobby and Joseph were the sweetest guys! Nobody was willing to take a chance, but we told them, 'We've rehearsed these songs, and we're playing.' Jesse was playing bass, and Bobby and Joseph said, 'Well, you guys should come in and play!' I think it was Wednesday or Thursday nights – never a weekend, because they had a lot of pool players.

"They had a stage. There was no PA – we had to round up a PA and mics and all that stuff. At that time in Texas, you had to have your own PA. Clubs didn't have PAs – you brought yours in. And if you had a PA, you had a van. And if you had a van, you had bigass amps. Nothing was mic'd except vocals. Kathy and I would put up fliers up and down the Drag with wallpaper paste. You could NEVER get them down! We covered the town with those fliers, and they stayed up for years!"

Meantime, the Violators sought a higher-profile gig happening sooner: The Sex Pistols were coming to San Antonio.

"After getting our demo tape and band photo," writes Sublett, "the concert promoter called back to say we could have the gig if he could fuck Marilyn, the drummer.

"We told him to go fuck himself, instead."

THE Lu♥Doc

Dear Luv Doc,

So far this year I have been doing a good job keeping in the holiday spirit, but this morning my neighbor's landscapers woke me up at 7am with their leaf blowers and yelling. That was bad enough, but when I went outside to go to work, I noticed that they had blown my neighbor's leaves onto my side of the street and into my yard. Now I have to worry about upsetting my neighbor by telling him his landscapers are solving problems for him by creating problems for me. I'm not some sort of Gladys Kravitz. I would prefer to get along with my neighbors, but I shouldn't have to pay for my neighbor's sloppy landscapers. How can I avoid starting a feud with my neighbors but not spend my holidays raking someone else's leaves?

— Cranky in Crestview

"LEAF BLOWERS"

My first thought is that you should hire the same landscapers. That will put them in a real pickle. They will have to blow both your leaves and your neighbor's leaves onto somebody else's property. Plus, with a little gentle encouragement to other folks on your block, you might even create a domino effect where everyone in the neighborhood starts using that landscaper. What a logistical dilemma that would be. Their only remaining choice would be to blow all the leaves into a public park, elementary school, baseball diamond, golf course, or graveyard. Dead people are already six feet under. What's another 6 feet of leaves?

Maybe that's been your neighbor's landscaper's diabolical Machiavellian scheme all along, but I doubt it. Anyone who has spent some quality time slinging a leaf blower knows that there is a limit to the volume of leaves you can effectively displace by blowing air through a tube. Pretty soon you have to start bagging or you end up spending your whole day burning a huge hole in the ozone just to move a big pile of leaves a foot at a time. Eventually you're going to look up and notice that the 75-year-old lady across the street is kicking your ass with a rusty old metal leaf rake, cackling with glee at your belligerent adherence to the notion that technology always equals progress. Your fancy steam drill just got John Henry'd, bitch. That's probably why she looks like she's cackling. Or maybe she's just panting from emphysema.

So yeah, now that we've workshopped it, maybe hiring your neighbor's landscaper isn't the brightest idea. You would only be rewarding the transgressors and there is a strong likelihood they would do a shitty job on your lawn as well. On the plus side, however, there is a solid chance they are affordably priced. No matter what the size of your blower, putting leaves into bags is a time-consuming process that cuts into profits, so it's understandable, though perhaps not forgivable, that landscapers take shortcuts. Capitalism has its shortfalls.

The good news is that you don't necessarily have to solve the economic problems of the landscaping industry or address the shortcomings of the capitalist system in general; all you have to do is have a slightly uncomfortable conversation with your neighbor, who I think we can safely assume you know better than I do. Even if you don't know him from Adam, you can make some educated guesses. Does he drive a Tesla? If he does, you can thank him for his commitment to environmental responsibility and enlist his assistance to the injustice being done to you by his well-meaning but perhaps absent-minded landscapers. Does he drive a sparkling clean Ford F-150 Limited? You can empathize with him about his landscapers getting paid so much to do such a crappy job. Does he drive a rusted-out 1991 ex-church van with blackout curtains? Just call the fucking police because the real homeowner is probably in the crawl space. Anyway, you're going to have to use your good judgment and keen diplomatic skills, and even then the whole deal could go tits up and you could end up in a decades-long blood feud. If it were me, I would probably just ignore the leaves altogether and make myself a holiday cocktail. As a matter of fact, I think I am going to go do that right now. This shit is stressing me out.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

by Rob Breznsky for December 24-30

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): To ensure that 2022 will bring you the most interesting and useful kind of progress, take good care of your key friendships and alliances, even as you seek out excellent new friendships and alliances. For best results, heed these thoughts from author Hanya Yanagihara: "Find people who are better than you are – not smarter, not cooler, but kinder, and more generous, and more forgiving – and then appreciate them for what they can teach you, and listen to them when they tell you something about yourself, no matter how bad – or good – it might be."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Sometime during the Northern Song Dynasty that ruled China from 960 to 1127, an artisan made a white ceramic bowl five inches in diameter. About a thousand years later, a family in New York bought it at a garage sale for $3. It sat on a mantel in their home for a few years until they got a hunch to have it evaluated by an art collector. A short time later, the bowl was sold at an auction for $2.2 million. I'm not saying that 2022 will bring a financial event as dramatic as that one. But I do expect that your luck with money will be at a peak.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): In the Quechuan language spoken in parts of Peru, the word takanakuy means "when the blood is boiling." Every year at this time, the community of Chumbivilcas stages a holiday called Takanakuy. People gather at the town center to fight each other, settling their differences so they can forget about them and start over fresh. If my friend and I have had a personal conflict during the previous year, we would punch and kick each other – but not too hard – until we had purged our spite and resentment. The slate between us would be clean. Is there some humorous version of this ritual you could enact that wouldn't involve even mild punching and kicking? I recommend you dream one up!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may become a more audacious storyteller in 2022. You could ripen your ability to express the core truths about your life with entertaining narratives. Bonus: The experiences that come your way will provide raw material for you to become even more interesting than you already are. Now study these words by storyteller Ruth Sawyer: "To be a good storyteller, one must be gloriously alive. It is not possible to kindle fresh fires from burned-out embers. The best of the traditional storytellers are those who live close to the heart of things – to the earth, sea, wind, and weather. They have known solitude, silence. They have been given unbroken time in which to feel deeply, to reach constantly for understanding."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Taurus author May Sarton wrote a poem celebrating her maturation into the person she had always dreamed she would be. "Now I become myself," she exulted. "It's taken time, many years and places; I have been dissolved and shaken, have worn other people's faces." But at last, she said, "All fuses together now, falls into place from wish to action, word to silence. My work, my love, my time, my face: gathered into one intense gesture of growing like a plant." I invite you to adopt Sarton's poem as a primary source of inspiration in 2022. Make it your guide as you, too, become fully and richly yourself.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): In 2012, the writer Gore Vidal died the day after Gemini writer Maeve Binchy passed away. They were both famous, though Binchy sold more books than Vidal. Vidal was interesting but problematic for me. He was fond of saying that it wasn't enough for him to succeed; he wanted others to fail. The misery of his fellow humans intensified his satisfaction about his own accomplishments. On the other hand, Binchy had a generous wish that everyone would be a success. She felt her magnificence was magnified by others' magnificence. In 2022, it will be vital for your physical and mental health to cultivate Binchy's perspective, not Vidal's. To the degree that you celebrate and enhance the fortunes of others, your own fortunes will thrive.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Cancerian political leader Nelson Mandela was wrongly incarcerated for 27 years. After his release, he became president of South Africa and won the Nobel Peace Prize. About leaving jail in 1990, he wrote, "As I walked out the door toward the gate that would lead to my freedom, I knew if I didn't leave my bitterness and hatred behind, I'd still be in prison." Although you haven't suffered deprivation anywhere close to what Mandela did, I'm happy to report that 2022 will bring you liberations from limiting situations. Please adopt Mandela's approach as you make creative use of your new freedom.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): French poet André Breton wrote, "Je vous souhaite d'être follement aimée." In English, those words can be rendered as "My wish is that you may be loved to the point of madness" or "I wish you to be loved madly." That's got a romantic ring to it, but it's actually a curse. Why would we want to be loved to the point of madness? A person who "loved" you like that might be fun for a while, but would ultimately become a terrible inconvenience and ongoing disruption. So, dear Leo, I won't wish that you will be loved to the point of madness in 2022 – even though I think the coming months will be an interesting and educational time for amour. Instead, I will wish you something more manageable and enjoyable: that you will be loved with respect, sensitivity, care, and intelligence.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Many people in our culture are smart intellectually, but not very smart emotionally. The wisdom of feelings is undervalued. I protest! One of my great crusades is to champion this neglected source of insight. I am counting on you to be my ally in 2022. Why? Because according to my reading of the astrological omens, you have the potential to ripen your emotional intelligence in the coming months. Do you have ideas about how to take full advantage of this lucky opportunity? Here's a tip: Whenever you have a decision to make, tune in to what your body and heart tell you as well as to what your mind advises.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Holocaust survivor Viktor Frankl said that a sense of meaning is crucial. It's the key gratification that sustains people through the years: the feeling that their life has a meaning and that particular experiences have meaning. I suggest you make this your theme for 2022. The question "Are you happy?" will be a subset of the more inclusive question, "Are you pursuing a destiny that feels meaningful to you?" Here's the other big question: "If what you're doing doesn't feel meaningful, what are you going to do about it?"

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Scorpio guitarist Rowland S. Howard spoke of "the grand occasions when love really does turn into something far greater than you had ever dreamed of, something auto-luminescent." Judging from the astrological configurations in 2022, I have strong hopes and expectations that you will experience prolonged periods when love will fit that description. For best results, resolve to become more generous and ingenious in expressing love than you have ever been.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): "I've been trying to go home my whole life," writes poet Chelsea Dingman. I know some of you Sagittarians resist the urge to do that. It's possible you avoid seeking a true and complete home. You may think of the whole world as your home, or you may regard a lot of different places as your homes. And you'd prefer not to narrow down the feeling and concept of "home" to one location or building or community. Whether or not you are one of those kinds of centaurs, I suspect that 2022 will bring you unexpected new understandings of home – and maybe even give you the sense that you have finally arrived in your ultimate sanctuary.
