American Science Is in a Nosedive – and We’re All on Board

My first real introduction to scientific research made me nauseous. I was on a NASA research flight, an intern on a team collecting air quality data. Takeoff went smoothly, and we rose quickly to cruising altitude. Over the flight radio, the pilot calmly explained that our first task would be to measure the air directly above a station on the ground – which sounded easy enough. However, soon we plunged into a tight downward spiral, and I watched as the passengers – tenured professors, engineers, and student-interns alike – reached for their vomit bags.

Facing funding cuts, mass layoffs, and hiring freezes, the American scientific enterprise is currently locked in an analogous downward spiral. Slashing the budget of organizations such as the National Science Foundation, the National Institutes of Health, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration does irreparable damage to science and threatens the American people.

I grew up in South Austin, where my family still lives today. Inspired by really good physics teachers, Mr. and Mrs. Misage at Westlake High School, I decided I would be a scientist, but at the time I had little idea what that meant. My path forward was largely sponsored by the U.S. government. I held three internships: the NASA Student Airborne Research Program mentioned above, and later two NSF-funded research projects. Now, I am a Ph.D. student at MIT researching air pollution from wildfires. I worry that future students won't be afforded the same opportunities and may be discouraged from pursuing scientific careers. Already, similar undergraduate programs are being eliminated, and graduate schools, faced with limited support, are admitting fewer students.

Toward the end of our flight, after everyone had recovered, we flew low over the ocean, where cargo ships stretched out toward the horizon off the coast of Los Angeles. Chatter filled my headphones – we were seeing alarmingly high concentrations of toxic chemicals from those ships, and they were blowing straight into port. People on the ground, enjoying their sunset view, had no idea what they were breathing in, and they would have no way of knowing without scientific observations, including the ones being taken on our flight.

Each city faces a distinct challenge in managing its air pollution. I remember being in middle school when wildfires devastated Bastrop and Spicewood in 2011. During the summer, Austin is regularly hit with dust from the Sahara Desert blown across the Atlantic, and wildfire smoke blown up from Mexico. In recent years, more 100-degree days have led to exacerbated smog pollution. We know these things because of data collected and analyzed by organizations like NOAA and EPA. This holds communities accountable to enact the policies necessary to limit emissions and ensure healthy air. The work remains important; around half of the U.S. population is breathing in unhealthy levels of air pollution – and unfortunately this includes Austin.

Despite bipartisan support for scientific research, proposed cuts jeopardize intricate systems of discovery, monitoring, and regulation like the one constructed to manage air pollution. The same story is playing out in other fields: cancer research, renewable energy, extreme weather forecasting, and so many more. We will lose the capacity to treat diseases and monitor certain dangers, like hurricanes, but the problems aren't going away. Beyond all of that, reducing federal science funding is simply a bad investment – it will stifle innovation and hurt the U.S. economy.

We can all use our voices to get involved in this issue. I encourage you to call your representatives and voice your support for continued science funding in the U.S. Tell them you are concerned about how science funding cuts will impact your community. An investment in science is an investment in the American people, and it will lead to a healthier, more prosperous future. ■

NOT WORLD WAR III (YET): Things have changed quickly in the last few days, but as of Wednesday as the Chronicle went to press, the cease-fire deal between Israel and Iran was holding. Both nations had declared victory, while a U.S. intelligence report said America’s bombing in Iran didn’t dismantle Iran’s nuclear progress, but set it back a few months.

NATO MEMBERS PONY UP: And with global military threats top of mind, on Wednesday NATO allies agreed to dramatically increase their defense spending, in a demonstration aimed at keeping Donald Trump on board with the whole post-World War II tradition of collective defense. The new defense spending target for member countries is 5%, up from the 2% target that not all members had been reaching to begin with.

INCOHERENCE IS NOT THE SAME AS GENIUS: Trump campaigned on an isolationist message and complained about forever wars, but then went imperial with threats to straight-up annex part of NATO ally Denmark, then decided to bomb Iran. If there were ever rails, the train ain’t on ‘em. But what’s fun about that whole thing is watching JD Vance try to make sense of the absurdity with a fun little list. “What I call the Trump Doctrine is quite simple: Number one, you articulate a clear American interest,” he said in Ohio. “Number two, you try to aggressively diplomatically solve that problem. And number three, when you can’t solve it diplomatically, you use overwhelming military power to solve it and then you get the hell out of there before it ever becomes a protracted conflict.”

Area Lawyers Describe Immigrant Kids Without Representation, Refugees Arrested in Court

“It shocks the conscience,” attorney says BY JULIANNA PLEWES

Local immigration attorney Naiara Leite da Silva said it’s never been like this before. That this month, for the first time in her 19 years of legal practice, she watched ICE detain a man as she defended him at immigration court.

Despite his pending asylum claim – a legal avenue protecting persecuted refugees – and despite his compliance with immigration authorities, he was detained. Leite da Silva said that the officer admitted her client hadn’t violated any laws and that the officer wasn’t aware of any particular reason for the detention.

“My team has been prepared to witness this,” she said, “but no amount of preparation can really meet the devastation that it is.”

As the on-staff attorney at Casa Marianella, a local shelter for displaced immigrants, Leite da Silva works on a daily basis with people who have pending asylum claims and others seeking protective status. But as the Trump administration continues to subvert the legal mechanisms once relied on to provide due process and humane treatment to immigrants, her hope in the system has dwindled.

“My expertise is in law, and laws are not being observed anymore,” Leite da Silva said. “So what really can I do?”

Leite da Silva is not alone in her concern. Even before the administration formally took office, organizations like Casa Marianella began preparing for change. With the president’s campaign promise to lead the largest deportation effort in the United States’ history, the next four years did not bode well for those working to protect immigrants in our communities.

HEADLINES CONTINUEDA NEW DIRECTION FOR DEMOCRATS:

While the nation is still on edge over America's will-we-won't-we war story arc, we also have (for once, it seems) some evidence of a lively progressive movement in the United States. That is the sudden emergence and success of Zohran Mamdani, a democratic socialist candidate for mayor in New York City whose star rose seemingly overnight. He beat out Andrew Cuomo, and it seems like a huge symbolic shift for Democrats nationwide. He became popular with a far-left campaign that involved talking with Trump supporters about their money problems and presenting them with socialist solutions. He has some very attractive promises for New Yorkers – frozen rent, free buses, and free child care. Dems, listen up. People don't want to be poor. Focus.

MEANWHILE, ABBOTT BACK IN THE BLUNT ROTATION:

Three weeks ago in this space, we opined that the chances that Gov. Greg Abbott would veto Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick's THC ban, SB 3, were “zero percent.” God, it's good to be wrong! Abbott vetoed the bill Sunday night, saying it had constitutional flaws that would render it “dead on arrival in court.” He then sought the high ground on the issue, calling a special session for July 21 so that lawmakers may immediately create an extensive and costly plan to regulate the hemp industry. Abbott said he wants to outlaw THC products for minors, require product testing, give local governments the power to prohibit THC stores, and provide money to law enforcement to enforce the rules.

YOU, HOWEVER, ARE STILL OUT OF THE ROTATION:

Abbott's veto happened late Sunday night, but it took just minutes for Dan Patrick to notice and begin a public meltdown. First the lieutenant governor responded on X that he was sad for the families whose loved ones' lives had been “destroyed by these very dangerous drugs.” He followed that up with a delightfully petulant press conference the next day, where he said his working relationship with Abbott had never been better, but asked, “Where has he been all session?” Patrick got angrier as the press conference went along, claiming that hemp businesses are owned by drug cartels and that Abbott wants to legalize marijuana.

IMMIGRATION CONTINUED FROM P.8

Now, after six months of the Trump administration attempting to make good on this promise, the consequences of rapid deportation for immigrant legal defense groups have come to the fore. With the need for legal support increasing, the resources available decreasing, and the guarantees of due process gutted, groups like Casa Marianella have been forced to adapt to a new normal.

THE NEW NORMAL

Edna Yang, co-executive director at American Gateways, an immigrant advocacy organization, said that since January, immigration lawyers and advocates have witnessed the widening of ICE and the Department of Homeland Security's discretion, part of what has become the new normal under Trump. She said that this expanded discretion from federal law enforcement means more people need to worry about deportation, and old norms don't apply.

Before the current administration, the DHS primarily targeted recent arrivals, individuals with criminal records, and those who may pose a threat or danger to the community in some way. Now, Yang said, “We've seen a lot of that pushed to the side.”

Instead, longtime members of the community and even those who have entered the country lawfully face a threat from ICE and the DHS. Now, those once protected under claims of asylum, pending or granted, face deportation like that of attorney Leite da Silva's detained defendant. Now, cases once thought closed are reopening.

In the wake of these changes and as enforcement actions have ramped up across the country, the need-level for immigration legal expertise has skyrocketed. Elissa Steglich, clinical professor at UT-Austin's law school and co-director of the Immigration Clinic there, said that as soon as the election ended, from the beginning of the spring semester through early March, their clinic received an influx of calls and questions from both former clients and community members.

“There was definitely a lot of concern, anxiety, and uncertainty as the new administration started,” Steglich said. “[Immigrants] absolutely and now more than ever need quality advice and orientation.”

SUPPORT BOTTOMS OUT

While the need-level has increased, the resources have not. The Trump administration has slashed federal contracts supporting groups like American Gateways that provide education and resources to those navigating the immigration process.

Yang said American Gateways lost 30% of its entire operating budget due to federal contract cuts, forcing the organization to make difficult decisions regarding layoffs and programs. Now, with a much smaller staff, the organization struggles to help 20% of those requesting help, compared to the 25-30% it met before.

Yang said the administration has focused on cutting government contracts that provide education for detained people, including Gateways' Legal Orientation Program and Immigration Court Help Desk.

“Both of those programs were cut,” Yang said. “It is really a signal of what this administration believes about our justice system, that access to the courts, access to information and education, and due process are not important.”

“My team has been prepared to witness this, but no amount of preparation can really meet the devastation that it is.”

IMMIGRATION ATTORNEY NAIARA LEITE DA SILVA

ERODING DUE PROCESS

Like Yang, many area immigrant advocates have raised alarm over the weakening of due-process rights, the legal guarantees protecting immigrants from deportation without fair trial. Priscilla Olivarez, senior policy attorney at the Immigrant Legal Resource Center, said that nearly 80% of individuals in Texas will not have representation at immigration proceedings when in detention. With funding cuts targeted at legal support, even more people, including children and those deemed incompetent, must enter legal proceedings without the resources or understanding of their due process rights needed for a fair trial.

“It shocks the conscience when you see not only adults but children having to defend themselves in immigration court,” Olivarez said. “See it for yourself. See the lack of due process. See the individual's rights being violated.”

Even with legal support, the changing norms have made due process rights harder to protect. Steglich explained that compared to previous administrations, changes in immigration policy under Trump happen on the ground with little notice. “That again makes it much more chaotic, much harder to follow, even as an attorney,” Steglich said.

Detaining people at immigration court has further complicated the issue of due process. While immigrant legal defense groups typically encourage clients to attend their court dates and comply with immigration authorities, this heightened risk of detention deters immigrants from relying on the courts and from demanding a fair trial.

Recently a witness to what she calls a baseless detention of her own client, Leite da Silva said immigrants are scared to engage with the system. “Now we can't reassure people anymore,” she said. “It's devastating.”

While these Trump-era changes to funding, DHS discretion, need-level, resources, and due process have altered the immigration law landscape, immigrant legal defense groups persist in their missions.

“It's pretty clear and blatant that this administration is trying to criminalize providing a humane response to immigrants in our communities,” Olivarez said. But these organizations are not willing to give up the fight to protect immigrants anytime soon.

“In many ways, we've been here before, and we've responded. We've come together to support communities and demand that our rights be respected,” Olivarez said, “and we're going to continue doing that.”

GITCHA GITCHA GUMMIES HERE:

Without Abbott's veto, SB 3 would have destroyed Texas' $8 billion hemp industry and put 50,000 people out of work, starting Sept. 1. KUT reports that the owner of local hemp business Happy Cactus had planned to move out of state before the veto. Other businesses were filling huge orders and seeing lines out the door, even though they would have had two more months to operate. Now, the business owners are waiting to see what the special session will bring. Many of them support the regulation of THC products.

VETO TOWN: SB 3 was just one of a couple dozen bills Abbott vetoed Sunday night. Abbott also vetoed Senate Bill 974, which would have allowed public school teachers to serve on residential tax appraisal review boards, after conservatives began fearmongering that teachers would try to boost property tax values because higher valuations would bring more money to school districts. Six of the vetoed bills will be reconsidered during the upcoming session, including bills focused on water infrastructure, the prosecution of trafficking victims, and semiconductor manufacturing.

LET THEM EAT NOT EVEN CAKE: The governor also vetoed a $60 million measure in the state budget that would have unlocked $400 million in federal food assistance for poor families. The measure would have allowed Texas to enter the Summer Electronic Benefits Transfer, which would have provided $120 per child to pay for lunches during the 2027 summer months. According to the Tribune, nearly 4 million Texas children would have qualified for the food assistance that Texas lawmakers had, just to remind you, already voted to approve. And federal funding cuts have already affected food access for poor Texans.

It's veto time, baby

TRIAL BEGINS OVER MAN KILLED BY POLICE IN FRONT OF HIS CHILD

Alex Gonzales' parents claim APD failed them BY JULIANNA PLEWES

Last Friday, attorneys stood in Austin's federal courthouse to select a jury for one of the city's most pressing civil trials in recent history, that of Alex Gonzales' parents versus the city and APD Officer Gabriel Gutierrez. Whatever the chosen jurors decide at the trial's end holds significant implications for transparency, accountability, and the use of lethal force in the Austin Police Department.

This trial is covering not only the shooting of Alex Gonzales by off-duty police officer Gabriel Gutierrez, but also the Austin Police Department's subsequent investigation into what happened. The plaintiffs, Alex Gonzales Sr. and Elizabeth Gonzales, seek damages from the city for the death of their son Alex Gonzales Jr. and the allegedly inadequate investigation conducted by APD.

Kicking off this first step in the trial likely to last at least two weeks, Magistrate Judge Mark Lane and attorneys conducted jury selection June 20. Jurors will weigh the death of a man in the presence of his child (a baby who was in the backseat when Gonzales was shot outside his car). Jury selection gave both sides the chance to preempt potential juror bias that might affect the trial's outcome.

Judge Lane and each attorney – Jeffrey Hinds for the plaintiffs, Albert Lopez for the defense of Officer Gutierrez, and Monte Barton for the defense of the city – asked questions that hint at the disputes likely to sit at the center of this trial. Both the plaintiff and defense teams dedicated significant time to assessing jurors' opinions, positive or negative, about law enforcement, the city of Austin, transparency, use of lethal force, gun violence, and police accountability.

On the plaintiffs' side, Hinds focused on police transparency, asking jurors questions about the importance of police investigations and the release of details. Meanwhile,

Lopez, representing Officer Gutierrez, asked questions regarding the fairness of the trial system, of self-defense, and of how the presence of a gun impacts one's use of deadly force. Closing the attorney's opportunity to question potential jurors, Barton echoed Lopez's line of questioning, asking about self-defense and individual histories with gun violence, in addition to any animosities held towards the city.

After meeting with their teams, attorneys decided on a jury of eight, consisting of five women and three men, with three of the women being people of color and the rest of the jury being white. The trial began Monday with Judge Robert Pitman presiding. Look for more coverage online and in future issues. ■

MORE MOVIE MAKING: Abbott agreed to direct $1.5 billion to the motion picture industry over the next decade. Senate Bill 22 was a priority of Dan Patrick's, made possible by Matthew McConaughey and Woody Harrelson's hobnobbing with the lieutenant governor and other Republicans at the Capitol this session to win approval of the funds. The goal is partly to support the local industry and partly to ensure stories set in Texas are also filmed here.

MAKING IMMIGRANTS PAY MORE: Meanwhile, our Republican leaders are telling the state's public universities to identify which of their students are undocumented, so the universities can start charging them out-of-state tuition rates. Texas had allowed student immigrants in the country to attend college at the much-reduced in-state tuition rates since the bipartisan passage of the Texas Dream Act in 2001. But then Donald Trump's U.S. Department of Justice sued the state over the act in June and Attorney General Ken Paxton asked the court to agree with the feds that the law was unconstitutional. This will make a college degree from a Texas university unobtainable for many of the 57,000 undocumented residents currently attending college and for thousands more to come.

COMMUNITY COLLEGES FOR THE WIN: But some institutions are challenging the repeal of in-state tuition for undocumented students. Austin Community College District trustees voted unanimously this week to join a new lawsuit over the repeal of the Texas Dream Act, the Statesman reported. ACC trustees said the quick repeal of the law bypassed a process "meant to ensure fairness and transparency."

Austin Man Loses Leg After Being Denied Care in Jail, Per Lawsuit

Roland Nadeau had a severe infection and was found lying in feces in his cell

BY BRANT BINGAMON

Roland Nadeau was, in the words of his attorney, Rebecca Webber, in a revolving door at the Travis County Jail. A former chiropractor now in his mid-60s, Nadeau did many short stints at the jail during two decades of living on the streets, coping with schizophrenia and bipolar disorder.

"He was always arrested for some nothing thing, causing trouble but not harming anyone," Webber said. "And he gets dumped on the police, and they're the ones that have to deal with it."

Nadeau would also get dumped on the local hospitals, like he was in the spring of 2021, after a fellow homeless person hit him in the knee with a hammer. Records obtained by Webber show that Nadeau spent a week in a hospital in Smithville that May, being treated for a staph infection in the knee. Despite no improvement to the pain and swelling, he checked himself out. He was back at the Travis County Jail by that summer. Webber's records demonstrate that jail officials examined his knee and wrote that Nadeau had a MRSA infection — a type of infection that is resistant to antibiotics. The Travis County Sheriff's Office did not comment on this pending litigation.

Nadeau was released, only to be arrested again on Jan. 25, 2022, per the lawsuit. In a manic state, believing he was the deceased actor Richard Anderson, he was placed in the jail's mental health unit. Webber's records show that jail staff examined Nadeau's knee and documented the injury on Jan. 25, 27, and 28, but did not provide him with medical care.

appointment set for Feb. 9, after the storm abated, but wasn't taken to it.

By this point, Nadeau had been locked in jail for over two weeks. He told us the pain was so bad he dissociated from reality. "I would hallucinate," Nadeau remembered, "and I had these dreams that were so real, of going to Whole Foods and doing things out-

"He was always arrested for some nothing thing, causing trouble but not harming anyone."

ATTORNEY REBECCA WEBBER

Nadeau submitted two written requests for medical care on Feb. 1, the same week a powerful ice storm hit the city, causing some jail staff to miss their shifts. Nonetheless, staff examined the knee again. But, according to Webber's records, they did not provide medical care. On Feb. 4, with the ice storm still disrupting jail operations, he again submitted a written request for care. He received an appointment with the jail's physician but was not taken to it. He had another side the cell as if the door was open. At one point, I created some type of juice formula that got color back into the leg. And none of those things happened of course."

On Feb. 10, Nadeau was visited by his court-appointed attorney, Morgan Shelburne, who was horrified by his appearance. "I believe that he has a bone infection in his knee that has rapidly advanced," she wrote to county officials after the visit, "and he has not received adequate medical care, putting his health at severe risk.” Shelburne described Nadeau’s knee as red and swollen to the size of a small cabbage. She wrote that he was unable to get to the toilet and water fountain. She said she feared that if he were not sent to a hospital immediately his knee would become septic.

Nadeau had another doctor’s appointment that day. He was not taken to it. As he lay in his cell, Shelburne got an order from a judge allowing her to photograph his condition. Flies flew from the cell when guards opened the door the next day. Shelburne found Nadeau disoriented, lying in feces. A medical officer evaluated him but only by peering through the cell’s food chute, because of the stench. The officer ordered that Nadeau be given naproxen but not that he immediately be taken to a doctor. Nadeau did not see a doctor on Feb. 12 or 13 either.

On Feb. 14, Shelburne wrote to Travis County officials again, describing what she had seen three days earlier. “Mr. Nadeau had blood near his anus that was visible while he was on the floor. The toilet was full. There were pieces of food, feces, empty Styrofoam containers, and urine on the floor surrounding Mr. Nadeau. Mr. Nadeau had a blanket that barely covered his left leg. Flies flew out of his cell. Mr. Nadeau was dirty and unwashed. His injuries appeared to not have been treated. Mr. Nadeau had bruises on his legs and bed sores. Feces was stuck to his backside.”

Nadeau was finally seen by a doctor at the jail the next day, Feb 15. The doctor immediately called an ambulance. At the hospital, doctors decided they had to amputate Nadeau’s leg to save his life. First, they amputated below the knee, to try to preserve the leg’s usefulness. But the infection was still active. They amputated again, taking off the knee.

Webber told us that Nadeau’s story is the worst case of negligence she’s ever heard associated with the Travis County Jail. She and Nadeau are suing Travis County, accusing jail officials of violating Nadeau’s rights under the Rehabilitation Act and Americans With Disabilities Act. Federal Judge Robert Pitman ruled in May that Webber has presented strong arguments and the lawsuit can go forward. If the county doesn’t settle, the trial will begin next February.

After Nadeau’s leg was amputated, his son, Phil, found him a house in San Marcos. Nadeau told the Chronicle that he now sees his grandchildren, goes to church, and is receiving therapy. But he finds it very hard to move around. He has a prosthetic that cost tens of thousands of dollars but hasn’t been able to master it. He said he feels suicidal urges and tried to step in front of a bus after the amputation.

“Everything’s so difficult to do,” he said. “Other people can do it, but I can’t seem to do it. It’s more than I can handle.” ■

THAT'S NOT HOW YOU TREAT PEOPLE:

A federal judge in San Antonio ruled last week that the state of Texas has, for decades, unnecessarily institutionalized as many as 4,500 people with intellectual and developmental disabilities in nursing homes, denying them services they are entitled to by law. In the ruling, U.S. District Court Judge Orlando Garcia said state authorities caused irreparable harm to people with intellectual and developmental disabilities by withholding the assessment of needs, provision of services, and treatment in their individual cases. The ruling came in a lawsuit filed 15 years ago by the Center for Public Representation and Disability Rights Texas.

LEAKY LIFEBOAT: Also, Austin has leaky pipes. Yes, it's true, and the pipes are more leaky than anyone had ever guessed. The city water utility reports that Austin has lost 7 billion gallons of water per annum from its water treatment and distribution system in recent years – enough water to fill Lady Bird Lake three times. But actually, according to the water utility, the city lost even more water last year – 9.3 billion gallons, enough to fill the lake four times. However, as KUT surmises from the water report, 2024 may have simply been a bad year for leaks.

Celebrating 10 Years of Marriage Equality

And worrying about the future BY BRANT BINGAMON

The case that allowed David Nielsen and Scott Poppaw to legally marry, Obergefell v. Hodges, was decided 10 years ago, on June 26, 2015. Nielsen remembers sitting in a conference call at his job at IBM that day, watching the news, waiting for the announcement.

“So in the middle of this conference call with other managers across the country, the Supreme Court issues the ruling,” he said. “I get really excited and say, ‘We can get married!’ And I realized I’m not alone. I just outed myself to this entire group of managers.”

Poppaw takes up the story. “He came home and asked me, ‘You wanna get married?’ And I was like, ‘Yeah, let’s go.’ We went down and got the license.”

A week later, on a sunny July 4th afternoon, Nielsen and Poppaw got hitched alongside 40 other couples on the south steps of the Capitol. Friends handed out flowers. Photographers snapped pictures. The photo that ran in the Chronicle shows the couple in a pair of matching rainbow vests painted by Poppaw. After the ceremony, they mingled with the other newlyweds at a reception at the W Hotel. They ended the night watching the fireworks over Lady Bird Lake.

At that point, Nielsen and Poppaw had been together 18 years. They’d dreamed about getting married. “It’s something that’s precious, that we were allowed to experience, that we never thought would ever happen within our lifetimes,” Poppaw said.

The Obergefell decision clarified that the 14th Amendment’s due process and equal protection clauses give gay couples the same right to marry as straight couples. The amendment has long been used to decide whether different groups of Americans have the same rights as the society at large, as it was in Brown v. Board of Education (which outlawed racial segregation in public schools), Loving v. Virginia (which ended state bans on interracial marriage), and Roe v. Wade (which legalized abortion until it was overturned in 2022).

Obergefell confirmed a range of rights for same-sex couples that heterosexual couples take for granted, including health care rights, parental rights, and inheritance rights. Poppaw, who has been HIV positive for over 30 years, said receiving the health care rights was particularly important to him and Nielsen. Both had friends with AIDS who were not allowed to have their partners with them as they died. “There’s over a thousand different rights and privileges afforded to married couples that you can’t get if you’re not married,” Poppaw said. “Especially, for us, it was just medical issues. If one of us is sick, can the other person advocate for them and direct the medical care?”

Nielsen said the fact that their marriage is sanctioned by law made it easier when they took his parents into their home to care for them at the end of their lives. “They both had dementia and couldn’t live on their own,” Nielsen said. “And we were back and forth to the hospital and rehab places many times. And it made Scott’s presence, I think, much more valid to the people there, that he was legally my spouse. He had a say in my parents’ care as much as I did, and he could help direct that if I wasn’t there.”

As they celebrate the 10th anniversary of their marriage, Nielsen and Poppaw are thankful but anxious. When the Supreme Court reversed Roe v. Wade in 2022, Justice Clarence Thomas suggested the court use the same reasoning to consider overturning Obergefell and other landmark decisions legalizing gay sex and the use of contraceptives (though he did not, as Poppaw noted, propose overturning Loving v. Virginia, which protects his interracial marriage). Last week, Thomas was part of the 6-3 majority in U.S. v. Skrmetti, which ruled that a Tennessee law banning gender-affirming medical care for transgender children does not violate the 14th Amendment’s equal protection clause. In her dissent, Justice Sonia Sotomayor said the decision will “do irrevocable damage to the Equal Protection Clause” and that her conservative colleagues had “abandon[ed] transgender children and their families to political whims.”

A vehicle to overturn Obergefell is already working its way through the courts. Kim Davis, a former court clerk from Kentucky, has asked the courts to reverse a $100,000 judgment against her, arguing that she was protected by the First Amendment when she refused to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples after the Obergefell decision. Davis’ lawyer, Mat Staver, has promised to appeal the case to the Supreme Court, saying in January that “it’s not a matter of ‘if,’ it’s a matter of ‘when’ Obergefell will be overturned.”

Poppaw said he believes that if the justices overturn Obergefell it could lead to mass strikes and a quick exodus of gay Texans to blue states where same-sex marriage would, presumably, still be legal. But he said no ruling from a court or any other authority can break his bond with Nielsen.

“We’re happy,” Poppaw said. “We’re committed to each other still, and we will be until we’re done. They can’t take that away.” ■

Massive Proposed Telescope From UT Enters Final Design Phase

One of the biggest telescopes in the world depends on federal grant BY BLAKE LESCHBER

UT-Austin just took a big step in its process of building one of the largest telescopes in the world as the Giant Magellan Telescope is moving into its final design phase to get federal funding through the National Science Foundation.

According to Taft Armandroff, director of UT's McDonald Observatory, discussions of the GMT started about 25 years ago among astronomers, but it's been seriously in the works since 2014 as academic institutions (including UT-Austin and Texas A&M) and private donors started putting in money.

Currently, the GMT has fundraised about $1 billion for the project as UT-Austin and 15 other universities and research institutions are working on this project.

Armandroff told the Chronicle that current larger telescopes, like at UT's McDonald Observatory in West Texas, can't see far enough, and the GMT will be five times more powerful.

The telescope is being built in pieces around the country, but it will be located in the Atacama Desert in Chile. Armandroff said this is because light pollution is so low there that the skies are clear for more than 300 days a year.

Even though the private funding started 11 years ago, GMT has been working to get federal funding from the NSF, which makes grants for research-based projects, particularly in universities. According to Armandroff, the total estimated cost of the telescope and related expenses is $2.6 billion.

Armandroff said the process for getting federal funding has been long, but it's nearing the end. Chances seem good. They've passed two design phases already.

"They had a review committee look at all of our drawings and concepts and plans, and these are worldwide experts in building telescopes and instruments. And they gave us a very high grade," Armandroff said.

Even though the federal government continues to slash funding and government programs, Armandroff believes that GMT will likely still receive funding. However, if funding was denied, Armandroff said GMT would look for more university partners and private philanthropists.

"If the NSF didn't plan on funding this eventually, why would they move us to the final design phase?" Armandroff said. "Wouldn't they say, 'Sorry, the administration isn't interested in this or this isn't the time for this?' But they've chosen to move forward at this very challenging time, so we're hoping that means we're a priority."

While GMT is waiting for funding, some of the larger and more time-consuming aspects (like the large mirrors and roads around the telescope in Chile) are already being worked on.

The Atacama Desert is over 4,000 miles from Austin, but Armandroff said UT students will have a room in Austin to study the data from the telescope and make observations.

With this large project continuing on track, Armandroff believes the U.S. will not fund another telescope of this caliber in the foreseeable future. Armandroff projects that the final design review will occur in early 2027, and then go into congressional budgets about six months later. He expects the telescope to go online in the 2030s.

Texas Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick's Unpopular Crusade Against Cannabis Gets Vetoed

Gov. Abbott now aims to regulate Texas' consumable hemp industry with special session

Texas was 40 minutes from a new era of prohibition. One that would have realistically shuttered thousands of independent businesses and, most importantly, tread upon rights of Texans – imposing criminal penalties for possessing federally legal consumable hemp products.

Then, with the clock running out, Gov. Greg Abbott vetoed Senate Bill 3.

It was another plot twist in SB 3's curious path through the legislative session and one rejoiced by business owners, prominent veterans groups, and a growing body of cannabis advocates who had remained highly engaged throughout the legislative session.

With his decision to veto, Abbott issued a four-page proclamation stating that he believed the bill had been well-intentioned, but that it was vulnerable to being ensnared in constitutional challenges.

"If I were to allow Senate Bill 3 to become law, its enforcement would be enjoined for years, leaving existing abuses unaddressed," Abbott wrote of his decision. "Texans cannot afford to wait."

He referenced a similar consumable hemp ban, SB 358, that was passed in Arkansas in 2023 and has since been dormant as legal proceedings play out.

Abbott's proclamation also acknowledged that SB 3 could invite "criminal entrapment" upon Texas farmers. The 2018 federal Farm Bill permitted farmers to grow hemp, but SB 3 sought to ban any amount of all cannabinoids, with the exception of CBD and CBG. Because hemp plants contain roughly 148 other known cannabinoids, that would make the crop illegal, even if the amount of THC was very low.

Abbott signaled his interest in regulation instead of a ban and floated 19 potential regulations that could be considered in the special session he's called for next month. Many of them were the same cleanups that people in the industry had been calling for in the months leading up to the legislative session. Those include age-gating products to be 21+, imposing child-resistant packaging standards, and banning marketing that is attractive to kids. Abbott's list also called for regulations that many in the industry may view as overreach, like limiting sales to 10am to 9pm Monday through Saturday, restricting how many consumable hemp products an individual can purchase over a certain period of time, and giving regulatory authority to the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission.

Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick, who has made a THC ban his marquee issue this session, offered immediate criticism of Abbott's decision.

"His late-night veto, on an issue supported by 105 of 108 Republicans in the legislature, strongly backed by law enforcement, many in the medical and education communities, and the families who have seen their loved ones' lives destroyed by these very dangerous drugs, leaves them feeling abandoned," Patrick wrote in an after-midnight X post.

At a June 23 press conference he held in Austin, Patrick complained that Gov. Abbott had "parachuted in" after being quiet on the issue during session, and vetoed his bill without even the courtesy of a call.

"It puzzles me why my friend, Governor Abbott, would, at the last minute, about 22 minutes after 11pm, decide to veto this bill. I know he gave his reasons in his proclamation, but our team simply doesn't agree with those reasons," Patrick told reporters. "In reading this proclamation, you can only come to one conclusion, which surprises me: The governor of the state of Texas wants to legalize recreational marijuana in Texas. That's the headline, folks, because that's what his proclamation does. Now, whether it's unintentional and he didn't think through it, or it's intentional, that's the result of the veto. I'm very concerned that we'll go through this period of time that these shops continue to spew out their poison."

Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick lambasted the governor's last-minute SB 3 veto at a June 23 press conference

In both the inflammatory way he talked about hemp products and the sharp tone he directed against his GOP colleague, Patrick was upping the ante. Abbott had merely offended him by highlighting a handful of flaws in the bill and using them as a basis to veto it, but Patrick used his presser to argue against each point in the proclamation while tossing in guilt trips for good measure.

"If we don't pass a bill that regulates hemp and marijuana, then the status quo and those 8,000 shops continue selling poison and kids keep getting sick and parents keep losing their children and people walk in front of trains and people shoot somebody," Patrick said in a heightened moment of political theatre. "And, by the way, if that happens ... I'm sorry, governor, it's not on us. We'd have banned it."

Patrick's insistence that Texas shut down cannabis sales remains unwavering, despite it being deeply unpopular with voters.

A poll of Republican primary voters, conducted this month by Ragnar Research Partners and commissioned by the Texas Hemp Business Council, found that 47% of Texas Republicans oppose banning hemp products, compared to 37% supporting a ban. Another polling report, issued in June by Fabrizio, Lee & Associates, found that Texas voters opposed Gov. Abbott signing SB 3 into law at a 3-to-1 ratio.

The press conference couldn't have helped Patrick's approval ratings. He seemed cocky and desperate and, perhaps, in denial.

"I'm not having a bad day," he insisted at one point. "Texas is having a bad day." ■

ROBOT'S FIRST RODEO

AUSTIN IS AT THE FOREFRONT
OF THE DRIVERLESS CAR REVOLUTION.
IS THAT A GOOD THING?

STORY BY BENTON GRAHAM

Spotting an autonomous vehicle driving around the streets of Austin is nothing out of the ordinary. In fact, it's become as common as 100-degree days in July or a plague of grackles descending on the Hancock Center H-E-B at sunset. What's less common: Austinites actually hitching a robotic ride.

That all changed in March, when riders had the chance to opt in to Waymo service on the Uber app. Now, Austinites have access to a technology that once seemed impossibly futuristic.

As AVs continue to pop up in more cities nationwide, many will be looking to the experiences in Austin as a guide for what to expect from the technology. With Waymos in operation for months, Tesla's robo-taxi service launched June 22 (with a safety driver in the passenger seat), and major companies like Volkswagen and Amazon testing vehicles, the AV experience in the coming years in Austin figures to have significant ramifications for the transportation future in the city and beyond.

ART BY ZEKE BARBARO / GETTY IMAGES

GOOD NEWS; BAD NEWS

Some early data has suggested that Austinites have embraced the opportunity to use Waymos. YipitData found that Waymo rides accounted for 20% of Uber rides during the last week of March. And, according to an Uber spokesperson, customers have been rating their Waymo trips with Uber, on average, as 4.9 stars in Austin.

But some rides have not been so positive. Becky Levin Navarro is among the customers who did not have an experience that she deemed worthy of five stars. What started as a Saturday moms-on-the-town hangout took an unexpected turn when the group of four women tried to end a Waymo ride set to begin at Matt's El Rancho and end at Deep Eddy Cabaret.

"We were just four moms going out on a Saturday afternoon," she said. "We were like, 'This is so exciting.'"

As the Waymo drove up the intersection of Veterans Drive and Lake Austin Boulevard, Deep Eddy Cabaret came into view on their left. The car then moved into the right lane and put on its signal, seemingly driving farther away from their destination. They attempted to end the ride, but the vehicle proceeded to loop around MoPac and eventually stopped at a curve on West Sixth Street under the highway.

"This is not a safe spot," they told the customer service representative on the line.

Meanwhile, the vehicle added its own commentary. "Vehicle approaching," it warned when a car would come upon them.

While they didn't want to get out at that spot, they also didn't want to be stuck in the car. They tried to open the door, but it didn't work (riders need to pull the handle twice for it to open). After five minutes, they managed to get out.

Levin Navarro gave the ride one star. She added that she's not sure if she'll get in another Waymo anytime soon.

According to city data, 26 of the 108 AV incidents reported to the city, which began tracking incidents two years ago, came between March and May 2025. In one report, a police officer noted that a Waymo had passed a funeral procession despite their emergency lights being on. On May 27, a resident reported an issue with a Waymo blocking their driveway.

"We can't leave the driveway or get into our driveway," they reported. "There is a driverless car running on the street blocking our driveway. It has been there for 1 hour and I have know [sic] idea why."

||| "The better your city transportation system is, the less you have any need for robotic taxis."

PROFESSOR PETER NORTON

DUELING ACADEMICS

Among academics who study transportation, there are certain ideas that are broadly agreed on. For example, many agree that when highways add more lanes, it eventually leads to more traffic on roads – a concept known as induced demand.

However, that is not necessarily the case when it comes to AVs and what they mean for our transportation future. Some see the vehicles as the solution to our road safety woes, while others see the cars as an overly complicated solution considering that public transit, biking, and walking are all safe forms of transport.

Peter Norton is a professor at the University of Virginia and author of Autonorama: The Illusory Promise of High-Tech Driving. Norton is not necessarily opposed to autonomous, or as he prefers, robotic, cars driving people. He said that he is even impressed by the technology. But he is skeptical about what it will mean for society, in part because of how expensive the vehicles are.

"A successful robotic car experience would be cost effective," Norton said. "What we're getting instead is a very expensive service that only appears to be cost effective because companies like Waymo are willing to lose a lot of money on every ride, and I think it's telling that they won't tell you how much money they lose on every ride, because to me, that means they're not proud of it." Waymo declined to comment on its finances.

Norton said the company is willing to lose money on the endeavor, because someday the vehicles might be attractive in the luxury passenger transportation market. So while rideshare can work like an advertisement for rich riders, meanwhile, if cities and states begin to accommodate these vehicles, they'll also do so at a cost to other transportation projects. Instead, he would like to see cities invest in public transportation systems and bike lanes, as well as reform zoning to permit mixed use and affordable housing.

"The better your city transportation system is, the less you have any need for robotic taxis," Norton said.

Junfeng Jiao, director of the Urban Information Lab at UT-Austin, views the vehicles more positively because of their impact on road safety. Between Waymo's lidar sensors and cameras, he said that the cars are far safer than human beings, as we can only rely on our eyes and ears. Waymo "drives much better than a human being, even much better than myself," Jiao added.

Safety has been a core promise for companies like Waymo. Norton said the company's approach has been to play the long game by having its cars be more cautious than competitors. One of the other companies set to enter the market is Tesla. Some question if Tesla will be as cautious. For example, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration is currently investigating Tesla's Full Self-Driving technology. Jiao said he believes AVs broadly will "get better and better through innovation and improvement," thanks to NHTSA safety standards.

Tesla hasn't done much to soothe fears about a rushed approach. When it launched the robotaxi service in Austin this week, it was in defiance of some Texas lawmakers, who wrote a letter asking the company to delay. Why? New statewide regulations for autonomous vehicles will take effect in September. "We believe this is in the best interest of both public safety and building public trust in Tesla's operations," lawmakers wrote.

In addition to safety, some have voiced concerns that AVs could contribute to sprawl. If someone knows they don't have to operate their car, why not live an hour away and sleep on the way into work? With this in mind, Jiao said it's important to plan for "15-minute cities" – the concept that people should be a 15-minute walk or bike ride from most essential services.

As for cost, Jiao thinks it will go down over time and improve accessibility for the public. "Not everybody can drive a car, some are mentally or physically not able to do that," he said. "We have more and more older population. They might need to have an autonomous vehicle. Or a disabled person, they might need an AV to drive them around. That is a huge benefit to society we cannot overlook."

THE WAIT IS OVER

Despite differing views in academia, one thing is clear: Companies see Austin as fertile ground to test their technology. Elon Musk posted on X on May 29 that Tesla's Y model had begun driving around Austin with no one in the driver's seat "for the past several days." Tesla's approach has contrasted with Waymo, which tested its vehicles without drivers for over six months before launching to the public.

"A month ahead of schedule. Next month, first self-delivery from factory to customer," Musk added in his post. Bloomberg reported that Tesla plans to launch robotaxi service with about 10 vehicles and expanding to a thousand within a few months. (At first, access to rides will be by invitation only.)

Thanks to state law, Texas cities cannot regulate AVs, but Brad Cesak, a spokesperson for Austin Transportation and Public Works, said the city has had communication with Musk's company. "Tesla is working with the City of Austin's Autonomous Vehicle (AV) Working Group, which includes staff from multiple City departments," Cesak said in an email. He added that the city provides AV companies with maps of schools and school zones, information about traffic control for special events, and information about fire and police vehicles. Tesla blocked the city of Austin from releasing robotaxi trial records, according to Reuters.

Dan O'Dowd is the founder of the Dawn Project – an organization whose motto is "Making Computers Safe for Humanity." Ever since someone showed him YouTube videos featuring Teslas doing weird things in its "Full Self-Driving" mode in 2022, O'Dowd has been ringing the alarm about the dangers of the technology. Referencing the phrase popularized by Mark Zuckerberg, he said that the company has applied a "move fast and break things" mentality "to products that many lives depend on."

In an effort to raise awareness, the Dawn Project aired an advertisement during the 2023 Super Bowl that depicted a Tesla running over a child in a crosswalk and ignoring stopped school buses. Later that year, a Tesla hit and injured a 17-year-old student who had just exited a school bus in North Carolina.

However, O'Dowd said that he is more confident in other autonomous vehicle companies. "You should do thorough testing before you put things on the road," O'Dowd said. "As far as I know, Waymo has done that. ... Self-driving cars, when they work reliably, consistently everywhere, that's important. They will save a ton of lives. It just won't be Tesla."

Waymo currently has approximately 100 cars in service in Austin, with plans to ramp up to hundreds, according to a company spokesperson. The company issued a recall of more than 1,200 vehicles in May, due to concerns around collisions with chains, gates, and other roadway barriers.

Waymo and Tesla are not the only players in town. Amazon's Zoox, a company that issued a voluntary recall after a collision between an unoccupied vehicle and a person riding an e-scooter in San Francisco in May, has vehicles operating autonomously with a driver present to take over if needed, according to a company spokesperson. Volkswagen has been testing its van-like vehicles in Austin since July 2023 and also has vehicles in Hamburg and Munich.

Smaller operations are descending on Austin too. Ben Seidl bought a Tesla last August and quickly began to experiment with its "Full Self-Driving" mode in Portland, where he lives. "It just completely freaked me out in a good way," he said.

One night, his wife was sick in bed upstairs, he was downstairs in his pajamas. She asked if he could go to the store to pick up Sudafed. The store was a short drive away and offered a curbside service. Still in his pajamas, he had the Tesla drive him there. But he began to envision a world where the car would go to pick up the medicine on its own.

The experience gave him the idea for Autolane – a company that orchestrates AV rides and pickups. For example, its OpenCurb OS software would allow for a vehicle to park in a designated space. Store employees could then open the vehicle and place products inside.

Seidl wanted a slice of the Austin AV market, so the company is now testing OpenCurb OS at "one of Austin's top retail/entertainment destinations." He wanted in on Austin, because he sees it as a city at the forefront of a transformational transportation moment.

"We really think that Austin is going to become the epicenter of autonomy at least over the next 12 months, as these technologies begin to get tested, first in Austin from Tesla, and then scale all over the world," Seidl said. ▣

“Feedback Loop”

VISUAL ARTS

THROUGH JULY 24,
CONTRACOMMON GALLERY

Since 2020, gallery Contracommon has hosted critique groups as a way for artists to foster feedback from their creative community via Zoom and in-person meetings. This form has persisted for five years, but the new year has brought a new evolution: artists starting and finishing new work from within the critique group. These projects get their debut this Thursday over in Bee Cave, with participants including Váz Andreina, MJ Hernandez, Garrett Skupinski, and others. Swing by for the opening reception on Saturday, or check in any Friday, Saturday, or Sunday through July 24. — JAMES SCOTT

The Man Who Stole the Sun

FILM

THURSDAY 26, HYPERREAL FILM CLUB

Co-written by Paul Schrader's brother Leonard, this flick features a Schrader family script staple: bomb-making. Though only one of two films directed by The Youth Killer's Kazuhiko Hasegawa, this Japanese thriller packs a punch even beyond its explosive MacGuffin, which is used mostly to get baseball and Rolling Stones related victories. Programmer Ziah Grace claims, “You’ve never seen anything like it and you never will again.” Who are we to argue? — JAMES SCOTT

Moon Market

COMMUNITY

FRIDAY 27, SHOPS AT SIGN BAR

Taylor’s charming Rituals Herbal shop has moved to Austin, and here’s your chance to welcome them. They join a small community of shops next to the scenic Sign Bar, which offers a tour of Austin past with its collections of vintage signs and objets d’art, and the celebration includes a free raffle, refreshments, and an intimate market with vintage items, handmade goods, herbs, candles, jewelry, and magic. — KAT MCNEVINS

Saw

FRIDAY 27, HYPERREAL FILM CLUB

Have you seen Saw? To really see Saw as it’s meant to be seen (or maybe Saw-n?), you gotta get yourself a certified Saw sicko in the seat next to you. There’s people in this world whose love for the James Wan and Leigh Whannell-started franchise isn’t a game but a long-running devotion. Through their fawning eyes does this first feature shine especially, with all the key components that will later come to be signature Saw introduced: the scratchy VHS monologues, flash-bang editing meant to cover a low budget, vague homoeroticism, and Billy on his little bike. If nothing else, please take this away from Hyperreal’s Friday screening of this Aughts horror classic: Billy is the PUPPET. Jigsaw is the GUY. — JAMES SCOTT

n-bonacci Sequence!

Have you ever heard of the Fibonacci Sequence? You start with the numbers 0 and 1. To get the next number in the sequence add the two previous terms to create the next one, forming the infinite sequence:

0, 1, 1, 2, 3, 5, 8, 13, 21, 34, 55, 89, ...

There can be variations of the sequence! Check out the example on the right.

Example: 3-bonacci Sequence
Start with 0, 0, and 1, then add the three previous terms to form:
0, 0, 1, 1, 2, 4, 7, 13, 24, 44, ...

Can you complete the sequences below:

4-bonacci: 0, 0, 0, 1, 1, __, __, __, __, __, ...

FRIDAY 27, PARAMOUNT THEATRE

The dustiest creature feature outside of Arrakis hits its 35th anniversary with a Fangoria-presented screening. Released in 1990, there's still enough Eighties stink on this picture that its politics are, well, let's say hazy, but no one can deny it's a hell of a good time. A small desert town gets terrorized by giant worm monsters, whose defeat is a joint effort between homosocial handymen (Kevin Bacon and Fred Ward), a seismologist (Finn Carter), gun-loving marrieds (Reba McEntire and Michael Gross), and a whole crayon box of great character actors that make for truly colorful cinema. — JAMES SCOTT

The Sandlot FILM FAMILY

FRIDAY 27, LOU'S EASTSIDE

If there's a Summer Movie Pantheon, The Sandlot is definitely high in the ranking. Along with being incredibly quotable — "You're killing me, Smalls!" lives eternally — it's simply a shot of summer-soaked nostalgia. I didn't grow up in the Sixties with a feral band of baseball buddies, but this makes me feel like I did. I feel the companionship of treehouse sleepovers. I feel the terror of the shadowy dog behind the fence. I feel the anxiety of losing a prized possession. It all adds up to an aching lovely experience. How long will I love this movie? FOR-EV-ER. — CAT MCCARREY

Bad Luck Penny EP Release MUSIC

FRIDAY 27, RADIO/EAST

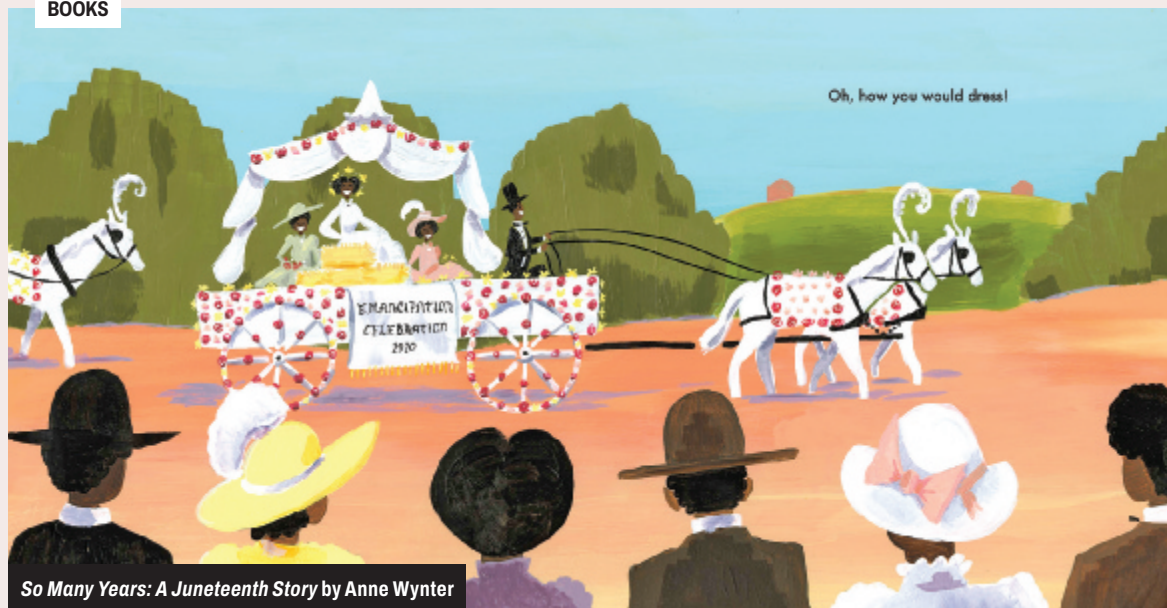

Anti-folk music may have been one of the few good things to come out of the Reagan administration. Beck, Jeffrey Lewis, Kimya Dawson, the list of legendary acts goes on ... but it's not yet lengthy in Austin. Bad Lucky Penny, however, is standing decidedly firm in the genre's legacy, and is out with its second folk-punk EP this week. Meet the quartet at Radio/East as they ring in the new batch of songs with Kid Charleroi and Other Vessels opening. — LEVI LANGLEY

BOOKS

So Many Years: A Juneteenth Story by Anne Wynter

ILLUSTRATION BY JEROME PUMPHREY / COURTESY OF HARPER COLLINS

GROWING BLACK LITERARY JOY AT AUSTIN AFRICAN AMERICAN BOOK FESTIVAL

"Before anyone finds out how high they can climb, Nell picks up a seed," begins the cumulative tale of Austinite Anne Wynter's award-winning picture book, nell plants a tree. In Wynter's story, Nell nurtures a seed, a sprout, and a budding pecan tree that in time becomes a home, a refuge, and a place for exploration for generations to come.

Dr. Rosalind "Roz" Oliphant nurtured a similar seed 19 years ago when she began planning the first Austin African American Book Festival. This year, the festival takes place on June 28 and features acclaimed authors and industry professionals like crime writer Walter Mosley, novelist and literary mentor Marita Golden, and Black Classic Press founder Paul Coates, among local authors including Wynter and LBJ School of Public Affairs professor Dr. Peniel Joseph.

AAABF grew out of Oliphant's now-shuttered bookstore Folk Tales, the legacy of which lives on in the festival and its attendees. "It's a blessing to see how it has grown and become a literary cornerstone in this community," Oliphant says. "So many of the young people who came to our Saturday storytimes, who participated in our summer reading camps, are adults now who bring their kids to the festival."

There's plenty for the next generation to do on Saturday. Alongside their robust adult programming, AAABF has consistently emphasized children's events and readings. "We really want the kids in our community to see that we value reading," Oliphant says. "We put a lot into creating a very exciting day full of movement and activity and reading and joy, all connected. Because for us, it is all connected."

Wynter will lend the exultant joy of her recent book So Many Years: A Juneteenth Story to this year's children's programming with a timely reading. The sparse lyrical narrative of the story was inspired by gospel music and visually interpreted in luscious illustrations by local Jerome Pumphrey. "It's a Juneteenth book but I really think it's a book that can be applied to so many parts of the Black experience," Wynter says. The author's picture and board books, which have drawn acclaim and several Ezra Jack Keats Awards, draw on classic motifs and structures she relished in the books of her youth and reflect the kinds of people and stories that were missing.

"I definitely noticed a lot of representation lacking when I was a kid and that's one of the reasons that I wanted to be an author," Wynter says.

Now, she finds her books shelved alongside others she's glad her kids get to grow up with — like Saturday by Oge Mora, who illustrated Wynter's book Everybody in the Red Brick Building. Wynter's kids, having grown up attending the festival with her, are looking forward to middle-grade author Don Tate's art-based presentation and a session with Zell Miller III, Austin's recently named poet laureate, about the poetry of Nikki Giovanni.

"It's so important, especially as a parent — but also as an individual — to be able to go somewhere and see Blackness celebrated and to see all of these Black authors and Black books and artists come together and present this community," says Wynter.

DAY TRIPS

BY GERALD E. MCLEOD

GERALD E. MCLEOD

Lake Livingston State Park offers a getaway deep behind the pine curtain of East Texas.

This is one of the most beautiful parks in the state's inventory. Towering pine trees shade the banks of the 83,000-acre lake. You would think the park would feel crowded with almost 200 campsites, most with water and electric hookups, and 10 screened shelters right at the water's edge. But the opposite is true. Everyone is spread out in the 635-acre park.

The campsites are some of the most special aspects of the park, most with easy access to clean restrooms and showers. Each campsite comes with a picnic table and grill. Being surrounded by the forest is a comforting feeling as a cacophony of birdsongs fills the humid air. The first cup of coffee in the morning tastes so much better in the crisp air beside the lake.

Of course, there are the usual recreational activities waiting to be enjoyed. The park has several miles of hiking trails through the woods. There is even an equestrian-only trail.

This time of year, the sandy beach and chilly water are popular with campers. Don't miss an opportunity to climb to the top of the observation tower at the marina for a panoramic view of the lake.

Impounded in 1969 on the Trinity River, the lake has become a notable white bass fishery, but channel and blue catfish can be caught any time of year. No fishing license is required when fishing from the bank in the park.

Lake Livingston State Park is 6 miles southwest of Livingston in Polk County, and a little over three hours from Austin. It is the second-largest lake completely within Texas, and supplies water to Houston, Beaumont, and four surrounding counties. A hydroelectric plant was added to the dam in 2021 to produce enough clean power for 12,000 homes.

Phish MUSIC

FRIDAY 27 - SATURDAY 28, MOODY CENTER

While I never thought I'd live through the proper era to write about a jam band, Phish, the rock group from Burlington, Vt., is back in Austin for the first time in eight years. Phish has been improvising throughout their live shows – and more than 15 albums – since 1983, featuring too-long guitar solos, too-long sets, but not-too-long a tour run to show for it. This weekend's shows at Moody probably won't look too different, just as any real "phan" expects and hopes for.

National Theatre Live: The Importance of Being Earnest FILM THEATRE

FRIDAY 27 AND WEDNESDAY 2, ALAMO MUELLER

Oscar Wilde's uproarious story of assumed identities and star-crossed lovers stands supreme through text alone. It taught me not to fight over biscuits and to always carry my diary so I have something entertaining to read. But the 2024 National Theatre production added a whole bunch of spice to an already delicious experience. It opens with Doctor Who's Ncuti Gatwa playing piano in a Barbie-pink dress, surrounded by a cross-dressing cast. It's a modern, brash take that combines Wilde's cheekiness with in-your-face joy. I like to think Wilde would love the simmering sexual tension everyone has for everyone onstage. I'm sure he'd enjoy how well this works.

Dogtooth FILM

FRIDAY 27 - MONDAY 30, AFS CINEMA

Before director Yorgos Lanthimos cast his unique lens on some of Hollywood's biggest stars in movies like Poor Things and The Favourite, his vision had a smaller scope. In his first Oscar-nominated film, Dogtooth, two parents sequester their three kids away from the world through physical and psychological means. With no knowledge of conditions around them, the children grow and are confronted with the inevitable hormones and curiosities that come with maturing. The stakes get raised in Lanthimos-ian (i.e., weird, disturbing, and sometimes bloody) ways as the parents struggle to keep their wards penned in. Feel every ick and see every awkward look in this brand-new 4K restoration.

Hotel Transylvania FILM

FRIDAY 27 & MONDAY 30 - WEDNESDAY 2, ALAMO SLAUGHTER LANE & MUELLER

Does he really say "blah-blah-blah"? Who knows with this daffy Dracula, voiced by the Sandman himself (Adam Sandler, in case you were thinking of the Spider-Man villain) and animated by the great Genndy Tartakovsky (Dexter's Laboratory, Primal). Rather than inviting human travelers to be exsanguinated in his mountain mansion, this version of Drac runs a hotel strictly for the monsters to get away from the village mobs. Yet his whole world goes upside down – much like how he sleeps – when his daughter Mavis (Selena Gomez) falls fangs over feet for a dopey human hiker (Andy Samberg). Screens at Draffhouse as part of their Kids Camp series for our younger monster squad members.

Virginia Creeper EP Release

MUSIC

FRIDAY 27, HOLE IN THE WALL

Virginia Creeper's latest album, People Love the Dallas Cowboys Because They Want to Love Themselves, only arrived last September, but Bandcamp liner notes reveal its songs – a countrified take on Phoebe Bridgers-esque indie rock – were recorded in the midst of the pandemic. No telling how Genevieve Post will deliver her next round of winking self-deprecation; that's what this show – with San Antonio genre/language chameleon Pam3, muted Houston emos Pallas Wept, and local alternative quintet Ritual – is for.

Ladyhawke + The Hitcher

FILM

SATURDAY 28, PARAMOUNT THEATRE

Before there was Willem Dafoe, there was Rutger Hauer. Few actors have ever managed to switch so seamlessly between marshmallow squishy and vilely vicious as the Dutch star of Blade Runner. In his latest double bill programmed for the Paramount's Summer Classic Film Series, Robert Rodriguez highlights two of Hauer's most memorable performances of the Eighties: fantasy romance Ladyhawke, in which he and Michelle Pfeiffer are lovers separated by cruel yet creative sorcery, and his all-time nightmare-inducing turn as an unnamed, motiveless killer in The Hitcher.

Lucyspin EP Release

MUSIC

SATURDAY 28, MOHAWK

Fresh-faced indie rockers Lucyspin have been playing together for nearly a decade, and they're finally putting down some of their punk-infused tracks for posterity. The quartet's debut EP blends pop-punk vocals with classic guitar rhythms and metallic delay tones. In a stark contrast to their rollicking first single, "Worst Company," you'll find the band inside at Mohawk Saturday alongside grunge-inspired indie pop outfit Valice and melodic shoegazers French Film, still riding the high of their own debut EP release earlier this month.

Pointe Noir

SATURDAY 28, STATESIDE AT THE PARAMOUNT

What do a murder mystery, crawfish, and beautiful historic architecture have in common? They can all be enjoyed at 2pm this Saturday at the Paramount's Stateside Theatre. Pointe Noir is the latest offering by Pat Mire, an internationally recognized Cajun filmmaker who founded Cinema on the Bayou Film Festival in 2006, and continues to make movies about Louisiana since his 1997 feature debut Dirty Rice. Pointe follows a filmmaker and crawfisherman who's reluctantly enlisted by a criminal defense attorney to help save the life of a falsely accused man on death row. Together, they must solve the mystery of who actually killed two people the night of Mardi Gras 30 years ago through digging into their isolated and secretive community. Doors open at 1pm, so you can sample Louisiana-style food, cookies, and music in the lobby beforehand, and make sure to catch the Q&A with the filmmaker afterward.

Antone's 50th Celebration: Soulhat and Grackles

MUSIC

SATURDAY 28, ANTONE'S

Celebrate half a century of beloved blues institution Antone's with signature Austin grit and gristle. Soulhat, an Austin staple since the Nineties, are known for guitar-driven songwriting that's alternatively soulful and screaming. Grackles, though a newer outfit, are composed of long-standing Austin multi-instrumentalists from many well-loved local bands current and past. "We're just really nerdy about guitars," vocalist and songwriter Noah Lit told the Chronicle recently. It's always a great night to be a guitar at Antone's, even more so at their 50th birthday bash.

You might be reading this and thinking, why Legally Blonde 2? That's the not-as-good-as-the-original sequel to a bona fide classic. Well, you may be right, but it's only because this time around Elle Woods is up against an even bigger beast than pretentious Ivy League men: indifferent politicians in Washington, D.C. So journey with Reese Witherspoon's beloved character as she puts herself on the line for animal rights, love, and, of course, the law. (Kind of.) What, like it's hard?

ATX Vogue Nights at Swan Dive

Looks like this year's the one where we're saying goodbye to the "Hi, Gay" industrial complex. To be totally honest with y'all, the fact that it was so swift a move for all these big-box stores to renege on their already paltry Pride initiatives shows how empty those gestures always were. Wouldn't our energy be better used to support and appreciate the places that have continued to support Pride? Queer-owned businesses, allies, even our freakin' Austin Public Library! (Who you should support anyway because where else can you read all your little gay romances for free? Not Barnes & Noble, honey!)

I think there's nuance to the conversation, obviously, and it's not a good sign that Target's not turning their Instagram icon rainbow. But ultimately, support only means as much as the motive behind it. With that in mind, I'll be continuing to throw my praise toward the places that see me and my community as people rather than walking dollar signs.

Les Ballets Trockadero de Monte Carlo

COMEDY DANCE

SUNDAY 29, LONG CENTER

Ballet is beautiful, sure, but what if it were also funny? Les Ballets Trockadero asked and answered that question over 50 years ago with the troupe's inception in New York City. Affectionately known as the Trocks, this all-male troupe appeals to ballet enthusiasts as well as novices for their skilled en pointe routines combined with hilarious parodies of classics like Swan Lake. Their demanding international tour schedule means they don't come this way often, so don't miss the Trocks' only night in town. — KAT MCNEVINS

Clara's Go Go Love Fest

MUSIC

SUNDAY 29, CONTINENTAL CLUB

Reed, a fixture at the club, suffers from a degenerative neurological disease that prevents her from continuing her work at the venue and in her job as a preschool caregiver. Native and transplant local legends Rosie Flores, John Doe, and Alejandro Escovedo headline the night, showing their support for another Austin music legend. — LEVI LANGLEY

Heartknit

MUSIC

SUNDAY 29, TWEEDY'S

Much like the patchwork quilt on its cover, the music on Heartknit's self-titled debut EP weaves a rich tapestry of DIY styles. Endearingly lo-fi guitar eclipses a barely there synth twinkle in melancholy opener "Fact or Fiction," and a drum machine beat adds a near trip-hop flair to idyllic power-pop centerpiece "Dormant Disease," but from the driving energy of "Subterranean Discharge" to Casey Allen and George Venus' quiet dual vocals throughout, the January release most recalls Nineties emo. The band plays alongside fellow twee lovers Team Trust and post-punks Shriill Yell at Subculture Swap's free, all-ages vendor/tattoo/tooth gem market. — CARYS ANDERSON

Funniest Person in Austin Prelims

COMEDY

THROUGH AUGUST, CAP CITY COMEDY CLUB

This annual contest is not for the faint of heart. The contestants will be alone onstage with nothing but their wits and a mic to hopefully impress the judges. Audience members must also have to muster some courage as these are the preliminary rounds, so the talent is unproven, and there are few things more squirm-inducing than watching a stand-up comedian bomb. But as they say, fortune favors the brave, and, who knows, you might just be on the ground floor to see Austin's next big comedy talent. — JAMES RENOVITCH

MONDAY 30, CENTRAL LIBRARY

One of the things about growing up in the Texas public school system is that if a football coach didn't skim the required reproductive health and sex-ed lesson, you probably had some digging to do on your own. But don't you worry: Local stewards of reproductive justice from the YWCA are here to help, presenting info to educators, advocates, and anyone interested in everything from menstrual cycles to contraception. — LEVI LANGLEY

Frankenhooker

MONDAY 30, ALAMO VILLAGE, SLAUGHTER LANE & LAKELINE

Few films are brave enough to tackle New York's super-crack epidemic, but let it never be said director Frank Henenlotter shies from the tough topics! His fifth feature film is an extremely loose Frankenstein play about a man whose fiancée is lost after a fatal lawnmower accident shreds her into a thousand pieces. Luckily, this man also happens to be an amateur scientist and isn't afraid to play God if it means he gets his girl back. His solution? To create the ultra drug super-crack, which is so potent that a single injection causes sex workers to explode and leave their body parts open for his pilfering. Exploitation in its most excitingly grotesque form, Henenlotter delivers freaks and fun so good even Bill Murray said, "If you see one movie this year, it should be Frankenhooker." — JAMES SCOTT

Austin FC striker Brandon Vazquez scores the winning goal in a 2-1 victory over the New York Red Bulls at Q2 Stadium

Rejuvenated Austin FC Looks to Ride Momentum Into Summer Stretch

Don't look now, but Austin FC is 90 solid minutes away from the first perfect month of soccer in club history.

Granted, June has been an abnormally light month with just three matches on the schedule, but after back-to-back hard-fought wins against the Colorado Rapids and New York Red Bulls, the Verde and Black are becoming reacquainted with an elusive old friend: momentum.

Standing in the club's way of a three-match winning streak is a trip to the PNW to lock horns Saturday with the always-tough Seattle Sounders. Since the Sounders joined MLS in 2007, Lumen Field has consistently been one of the league's most difficult places to play. However, Austin FC has acquitted itself better than you'd expect there, taking one win and two draws from four prior visits (compared to no wins and just one draw in four occasions playing the Sounders in Austin).

Verde will also have a distinct edge over Rave Green in the rest department. Coming off a full weeklong break, Austin FC last played a match on June 14. Since then, Seattle has toiled through three matches in the FIFA Club World Cup group stage, losing all three in what was dubbed the "group of death" for the tournament.

Adding to Austin's advantage, Seattle will be without two defensive starters in Nouhou and Jon Bell after both were shown red cards three minutes apart in the Sounders' previous MLS match against Vancouver.

Needless to say, Austin FC's players have nothing less than victory on their minds.

"For us, that's a game that we're already thinking about," goalkeeper Brad Stuver said immediately following the club's 2-1 win over the Red Bulls on the 14th. "We can already think about getting three points there."

Stuver's confidence was shared throughout the ATX locker room. There is a hope and a belief that things will start coming up Verde much more frequently than they did in the first half of the season.

"I think we have felt very unlucky in a lot of situations earlier this season, so the fact that a couple balls are bouncing our way now, it's something that we've got to keep doing," said striker Brandon Vazquez, now up to a team-high eight goals in all competitions. "I think we make our own luck. We build our own luck. So we just got to keep focused and keep working hard."

And for the players whose seasons haven't taken off yet, including club record signing Myrto Uzuni, head coach Nico Estévez thinks the week off could be just what the doctor ordered.

The Albanian forward, as well as Ghanaian teammate Osman Bukari, used the break to travel home and spend time with their families, who have yet to be able to make the move to Austin.

"Stay with the family, enjoy them, see their kids, and I'm thinking this is going to help both to come with a new energy," Estévez said.

MLS, as we often say, is as forgiving as it gets in competitive sports. The sins of the first months of the season can be washed away and forgotten with a few solid winning weeks. A refocused and reinvigorated Austin FC is more than capable of ending the club's two-year playoff drought. But only if that focus and energy translates to wins.

"You can just see the chemistry is building," Stuver said. "The group is coming together at the right time, and hopefully we can push that through the summer." ■

Note: As the Chronicle was going to press Wednesday evening, news broke that both Stuver and Vazquez had earned spots on the 2025 MLS All-Star Team, which will take on the LIGA MX All-Stars at Q2 Stadium on July 23. ## I Know What You Did Last Summer FILM

TUESDAY 1, HYPERREAL FILM CLUB

If an über-Nineties cast of three-name YA stars (Sarah Michelle Gellar, Freddie Prinze Jr., and Jennifer Love Hewitt – plus Ryan Phillippe) wasn't enough, a forthcoming sequel cements I Know What You Did Last Summer as one of those not-very-good slashers you simply can't hate. Before director Jennifer Kaytin Robinson's reboot (only a fellow three-namer could get this gig) – featuring Prinze and Hewitt alongside a new Gen Z friend group – arrives next month, relive the Fisherman's original Fourth of July hunt of four beautifully dumb teenagers. To quote Julie James: What are you waiting for?

– CARYS ANDERSON

Strategies for Healthy Trees COMMUNITY

TUESDAY 1, TERRAZAS BRANCH LIBRARY

Arbor Day was in April, but tree health is a year-round deal. Austin Public Library invites the city of Austin's Community Tree Preservation Division Education Forester Keith Babberney to share his expertise as a board-certified master arborist. Come for the workshop on "keeping your trees happy and healthy" but don't leaf right after! Make sure you stick around for a Q&A with Babberney, where you can ask all your Qs about caring for our urban forest.

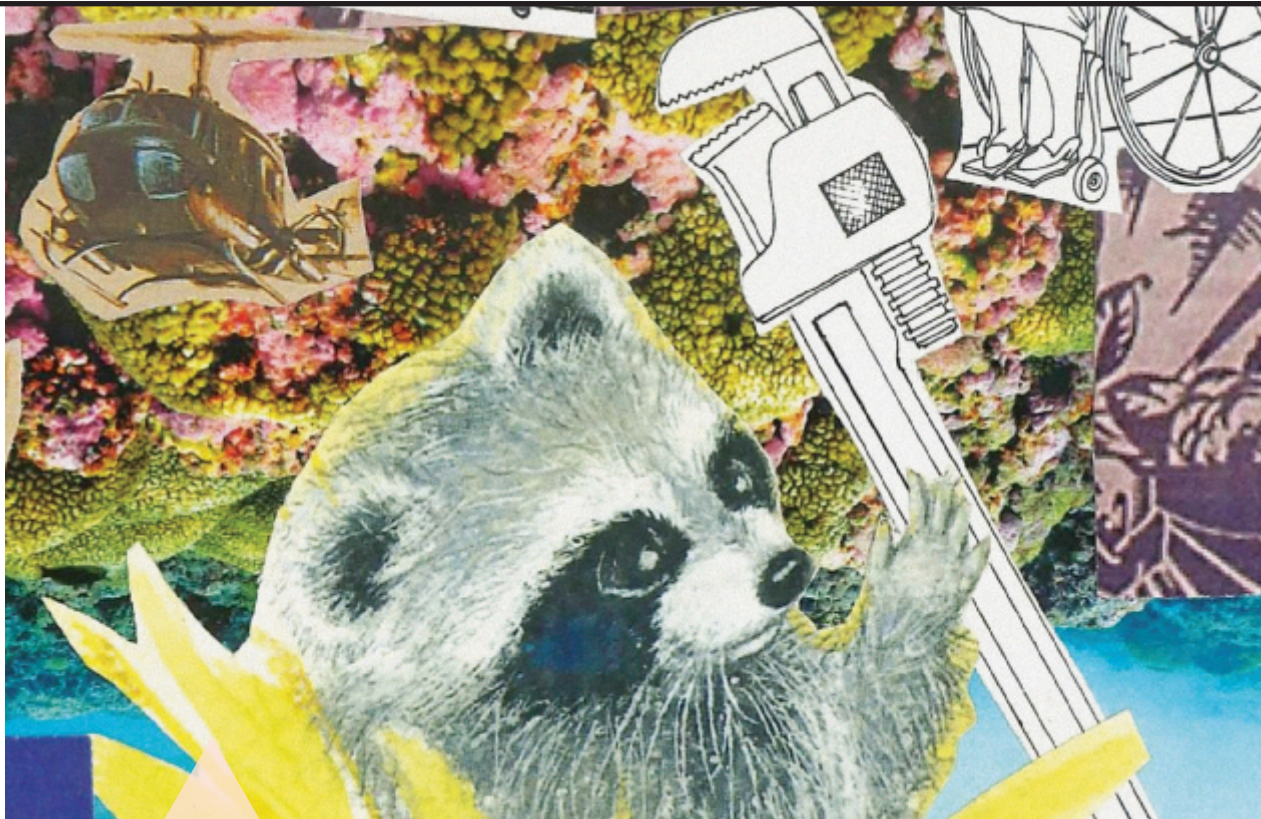

– JAMES SCOTT

North by Northwest FILM

TUESDAY 1, PARAMOUNT THEATRE

Mysterious organizations, staged car crashes, well-dressed men, and a framed Cary Grant: It's a Hitchcock film so overwhelmingly Hitchcockian some have called it a self-parody. Suave suits with bad intentions (and Cary Grant) run through a narrative maze of government information and espionage that'll keep you on the edge of your seat. One of Hitchcock's most commercially and culturally successful films, North by Northwest won all the awards, it's on all the lists, so if you call yourself a movie buff you should probably see this film. At the Paramount, no less!

Seizing the Zines of Production COMMUNITY

TUESDAY 1, MONKEYWRENCH BOOKS

Zines aren't just "back" – they are (for many of my friends, at least) a means of survival. They're a way to push back against the bureaucracy of who decides what gets turned into print and what stays as mere scraps. Perhaps the art of zine-making is also a way of creating a space for something physical in our excessively online world. Whatever it may be, it's up to you – that's the point. Make a fan zine. Make a zine about plants, or knitting, or knitting plants. Just whatever you do, don't go about saying print is dead.

– LEVI LANGLEY

Piranha (1978) FILM

TUESDAY 1, ALL AUSTIN-AREA ALAMO DRAFTHOUSES

For some reason, the Texas Lottery is getting in on Jaws' 50th anniversary celebration with a shark scratch-off as well as sponsoring screenings of films Jaws inspired, and this might be the funnest of the bunch in the Great Bites series that runs through July. It's a gory and goofy spoof with ravenous piranhas standing in for murderous sharks, helmed by a pre-Gremlins Joe Dante, and it went on to spawn multiple remakes. The master himself, Steven Spielberg, called it the best of the Jaws ripoffs, so Great Bites is off to a great start!

– KAT MCNEVINS

Tammy and the T-Rex FILM

WEDNESDAY 2, VIOLET CROWN CINEMA

Before she put the star in Starship Troopers, Denise Richards' most memorable role involved making out with a blood-drenched robotic T-Rex containing the brain of her jock boyfriend. This is a movie that only exists because a theme park operator offered director Stewart Raffill an animatronic dinosaur and gave him a week to start filming – and, boy, does it show. Join Trash in the Can podcast hosts Eric Samaniego and Wright Sulek as they take a bite out of bad taste with a very special screening of the goriest teen rom-com of the 1990s.

– RICHARD WHITTAKER

Contempt FILM

MONDAY 30 & WEDNESDAY 2, AFS CINEMA

Fritz Lang stars in this Jean-Luc Godard classic as himself, a director adapting The Odyssey in Capri, at odds with a brash American producer (Jack Palance). Of course, the producer is obsessed with Brigitte Bardot, the wife of a failed playwright-turned-screenwriter. Godard works out a lot of his gripes with the film industry through these characters, and it's unclear how much of it is autobiographical or allegorical. But what is undeniable is the beauty of the Capri coast, and of course, Brigitte Bardot's whole thing. Why not indulge in what is widely considered Godard's most accessible fare on whatever level you choose this summer? Whether it's about a canary yellow French escapist vision for you or the futility of the creative act, it's gonna be a good time at the movies.

– LINA FISHER

Remember My Name FILM

WEDNESDAY 2, AFS CINEMA

Lest you get the wrong idea about AFS' newest Essential Cinema series, On Our Way to Where: Women of '70s Cinema, do note they mean women in front of the camera; though the nine films featured may uniquely (for the era) foreground women's experiences, they are uniformly directed by men. Amidst more celebrated works like John Cassavetes' A Woman Under the Influence and Paul Mazursky's An Unmarried Woman are some intriguing lesser-seens, including series starter Remember My Name. An early film from Alan Rudolph, no slouch with strong women (Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle), it stars Geraldine Chaplin as a woman freshly out of prison for murder and looking to, erm, reconnect with her ex-husband (Anthony Perkins).

— KIMBERLEY JONES

Ninja Terminator FILM

WEDNESDAY 2, ALAMO SOUTH LAMAR

Remember how American director Terry Morse took revolutionary Japanese kaiju flick Godzilla, added some scenes with Raymond Burr, butchered the script, and made big bank with what he called Godzilla, King of the Monsters? Well, Godfrey Ho was arguably trying to do the same thing when he got the U.S. rights to Korean gangster actioner Uninvited Guest of the Star Ferry and tried to tie it to the current trend of Ninjasploitation. Hey, it was 1985, when ninjas were the third-greatest threat to life after guys in windowless white vans and quicksand. However, Ho didn't just cannibalize the Korean film, but many of his own films, meaning lead actor Richard Harrison had no clue he was even in this baffling mélange of Garfield phones, bowl-cut wigs, screaming crabs, intense conversations about pleats, messenger robots, and watermelon abuse. As one character ponders, "Why did God do this to us?"

Kicking the Bucket Podcast Club: Explore End-of-Life Decisions With Humor and Heart

COMMUNITY CONVERSATIONS

WEDNESDAY 2, SPICEWOOD SPRINGS BRANCH LIBRARY

Death comes for everyone, so why not prepare for it? Austin Public Library hosts an eight-week listening series of the Kicking the Bucket podcast. Each episode follows an elderly couple avoiding the nursing home and navigating the aging and dying process. After the episode ends, attendees will engage in discussion about the themes with an elder care expert as well as one of the podcast's creators.

Babe: Pig in the City MUSIC

WEDNESDAY 2, HYPERREAL FILM CLUB

You know how the film Babe is a quiet, sensitive story? Yeah, well: Throw that expectation out the window. You're watching the sequel Babe: Pig in the City, which in every second of its overwhelming runtime reminds you that THIS is a movie directed by Mad Max's George Miller. The plot: On the way to a sheepherding contest – the prize money of which would help save the farm from foreclosure – pig Babe and farmer's wife Esme are incorrectly accused of carrying drugs and get stuck in an unfamiliar city waiting for their next flight. After that, like, I simply can't explain. A lot happens, from Mickey Rooney as a clown to orangutans and chimpanzees, and of COURSE there's a little dog in a wheelchair. My advice? Just go see the movie. – JAMES SCOTT

Antone's 50th Celebration: Miss Lavelle's Birthday Bash and Tribute MUSIC

THURSDAY 3, ANTONE'S NIGHTCLUB

Austin's home of the blues officially opened its doors on July 15, 1975. Among a slew of 50th anniversary celebrations throughout June and July, this all-star tribute show doubles as a 96th birthday party for Miss Lavelle White, whose voice boomed throughout Houston and Chicago before she settled for good in Austin, where Clifford Antone's label released her first album, Miss Lavelle, when she was 65. Trudy Lynn, Guy Forsyth, Jacqui Walker, and Sky Downing salute the queen onstage.

Horsetail EP Release MUSIC

THURSDAY 3, HOLE IN THE WALL

Pretty much every Texan with a soul has complicated feelings about our beautiful, sweltering, gerrymandered, ridiculous state. Riley Hamilton expresses that universal moral predicament with a rich baritone that swells from a folk hero's croon to a folk hero's unvarnished scream. Horsetail tries out country, folk, and punk throughout their debut Four Horses, where the singer-guitarist references cockroaches, "white folks with dreadlocks," and Tonkawa Springs. "I don't know where I belong anymore," he wails; he wrote these songs during a stint away, but like so many of us, he admits: "I can't stay away." Daybed, with a fresh album of their own, and Dorothy's open. – CARYS ANDERSON

Heartworn Highways FILM

THURSDAY 3 - FRIDAY 4, AFS CINEMA

Before Austin's tech boom and ensuing personality change, it was mostly known as a (cosmic) cowboy enclave, helmed by the likes of Townes Van Zandt, Guy Clark, David Allan Coe, and Blaze Foley. Heartworn Highways is an intimate, taped-together VHS, day-to-day look into what it was really like for the musicians whose work is now the stuff of legend, but whose lives looked a lot like some of our friends' do back then. Watching Clark fix a guitar or being in the room for a Christmas party at Guy and Susanna Clark's house might specifically tickle die-hard country fans, but it's the satellite scenes including Austinites of all stripes, some born before the turn of the 20th century, that flesh out this ambient portrait of our place in a different time. – LINA FISHER

Electric Gravy's Indian-ish Fare FOOD

Eastside joint's playful stoner snacks are bold and very fun BY TAYLOR TOBIN

East 11th Street has much to offer as a burgeoning restaurant row: new all-day cafes like Radio Rosewood, beloved bars with top-notch pub grub like Nickel City, brunch icons like Hillside Pharmacy and Paperboy ... and, of course, the ultimate Austin BBQ destination known as Franklin. But there's another restaurant that's been steadily and reliably serving this buzzy corner of East Austin for almost 10 years, but with far less fanfare than many of its trendier neighbors. I'm talking about Old Thousand, a Chinese-Texan spot that opened in 2016 and gained a cult following thanks to dishes like brisket fried rice and jalapeño popper rangoons.

Old Thousand knows its neighborhood and knows how to deliver what the locals want while still allowing its team's creative interests to shine through. With Electric Gravy, newly opened next door, the team expands its Asian-ish culinary repertoire to offer an Indian dining experience that's thoroughly Westernized and very enjoyable.

Decorwise, the restaurant uses its industrial space to deliver a surprisingly warm vibe. "Quirky" is the name of the game here – vintage couches and armchairs, cushioned banquettes, vintage Indian movie posters, and elaborate tin ceilings balance out the concrete floors and wide warehouse windows. It's very flea-market chic, and this visual scheme makes it clear that casual comfort is an Electric Gravy priority. The service follows similar cues. While the pacing of menu drops and dish coursing needs more consistency (a common challenge with new restaurants), the servers and bartenders bring bright and enthusiastic vibes and a strong understanding of the menu concept.

I won't get into my very long and tedious rant about how "authentic" is the laziest and most irritating of all food adjectives. The food made by Eastern immigrants in Western countries tells a compelling story and offers fantastic flavors, and only a fool would devalue those dishes on the basis of

"but they're not what you'd get in the actual country!" So what? Good-tasting food is good-tasting food, and the Indian fare served in the UK and the U.S. often fits that description.

Electric Gravy makes no effort to shy away from the "fusion" label, proudly declaring itself "Indian with a uniquely Texan disposition." The cocktail list delivers that message loud and clear, using Indian ingredients and flavor profiles to tweak classics like the French 75 and the margarita. The Mumbai 75 invites rosewater and cardamom to join the typical gin, lemon, and sparkling wine, resulting in a summery libation with huge citrus presence and very subtle hints of floral spice. As for the Pudina Pani Marg, serrano-infused tequila merges with lime, mint, and cilantro to make a drink that will delight spicy marg fans and herb lovers, even if it's not quite in balance. The chaat masala rim is a cute variation on the usual salt or Tajin rim of a margarita, but the duskiness of the spice mix doesn't meld well with the cocktail's other flavors. It's a good and thematic idea in theory, but less successful in practice.

The food menu will read very favorably to anyone dealing with the munchies; it has fried food galore, lots of rich and zesty sauces, and a pressed-sandwich section that will bring joy to the hearts of Austin's grilled cheese enthusiasts. Starters include Indian street food classics like samosas and paneer, which Electric Gravy executes well. The samosas are light and noshable, with eggroll-like crispy dough and a mellow pea-potato filling with a gentle and aromatic seasoning. They're served with contrasting dipping sauces: a cilantro chutney bursting with vibrant acidity and salt, and a fruit-forward tamarind chutney that's equally tangy and sweet. The samosas can be ordered off the regular menu or as part of Electric Gravy's truly exceptional weekday happy hour, during which select snacks and an array of cocktails, beer, and wine are all marked down to $5.

A memorable appetizer combining a Texan bar food favorite with Indian influences is the curry queso. Processed American cheese offers a salty and familiar backbone, and the curry oil brings in a delicate flavor and a nice hit of heat on the finish. When scooped onto a chip, the queso makes for a harmonious bite, but the flavors could stand to be more assertive, and a touch of tart citrus juice certainly wouldn't hurt.

The "Gravies" section includes a mish-mash of curries, vindaloos, and masalas. If you've been to London and enjoyed a chicken tikka masala there, then you'll be happy with Electric Gravy's fairly by-the-book rendition, especially if you add the well-grilled and plush naan on the side. The pork vindaloo has a bolder presence thanks to a sauce that sings with acidity and slow-burning spice. The pork doesn't have much unique character, and the onions could be more thinly sliced for better distribution, but it pairs with grainy basmati rice to make a satisfying meal.

Now we come to the "Desi Meltz," the chief chaos agents of Electric Gravy's culinary concept. These panini-like creations give grilled cheese an Indian-ish makeover, and while the irreverence of this idea might inspire a few eyerolls among Indian food purists, these are some undeniably tasty sandwiches. The grilled butter chicken and cheese melt contains a rich and indulgent blend of rich butter chicken and Jack cheese, and the sourdough bread proves substantial and well-grilled enough to keep the naturally gooey ingredients from leaking out. You can choose a chutney to accompany your sandwich; the pepper-heavy Nagin chutney made this heat fiend a very happy diner.

The tadka fried chicken on grilled naan is the one sandwich that doesn't follow the "Meltz" model; it's open-faced with red onions and cilantro spread loose on the flatbread. The eating experience proved pretty unwieldy; this is a two-handed sandwich for sure. But the tadka fried chicken features a crispy texture and complex spice blend, the naan doesn't buckle under the toppings' weight, and the "Electric" ranch is fragrant and excellent.

The very brief dessert menu – only two items – includes a bulky and dense Bhel Kripie Treat with a perfumy flavor and a dry texture. I'd recommend skipping that in favor of the mango lassi, which is smooth, fruity, and just tangy enough. If you're in a cocktail mood, consider the Mango Lassi Painkiller, which welcomes rum, coconut, lime, and nutmeg to the party.

Electric Gravy makes perfect sense as a companion to Old Thousand. Both serve their neighborhoods with genuine warmth and understanding, both are unafraid to merge Texan themes with Asian flavors, and both excel at takeout (many of the folks who entered while I was there departed with to-go bags). I'd be surprised if it didn't become as firm a foothold as its older sibling on East 11th Street. ■

Brad Pitt's star power is the only thing that saves this deadly dull Formula One racing flick

BY RICHARD WHITTAKER

In motorsports, the truth is that the car depends on the pit crew. In racing flick F1, the whole film depends on Brad Pitt. If it wasn't for his rough-hewn charisma, undeniable star power, and ability to emote even when buried under a jumpsuit and skull-crushing helmet, then this loud, dumb, dull movie would be revealed as the cinematic equivalent of drive time radio.

F1 is like KISS. It's very good at what it does, but what it does is just being spectacular in a conventional, predictable way. Is that bad? No, but it's the best example of utterly generic heavy rock you can imagine.

That's no surprise, considering that F1 reunites director Joseph Kosinski with his Top Gun: Maverick co-writer Ehren Kruger, who is also legally culpable for not one but three Transformers movies. Not that the writing of F1 probably took them that long, since the story (co-credited to Kosinski) is basically that of Maverick only with new character names and a search-and-replace operation switching out "plane" for "race car." You know how this song goes: Aging former hotshot, haunted by an accident, gets into a war of egos with a younger version of himself, only for them to become high-fiving bros once the young buck realizes the old bull still has some tricks up his sleeves. Also, there's a technically competent love interest whose icy heart will be melted.

It is exactly the same story, only with the chest-bumping dudeverse of the United States Navy Strike Fighter Tactics Instructor program replaced by the high-stakes, big-money world of Formula One racing. Former F1 driver Sonny Hayes (Pitt) has been out of the sport for three decades after an ugly smash but is pulled back in when his old friend (Bardem) needs a new second driver for his ailing team. His arrival causes immediate friction with rising star Joshua Pearce (Idris playing a part clearly inspired by real F1 champ and producer Lewis Hamilton). Can they win together or will they crash and burn?

When Hayes is challenged as to whether he's too old for this, a list of names of drivers who were even older is rattled off, without mentioning that all those quinquagenarians were racing in the 1950s and most of them either failed to qualify or retired from the race. That may seem like an esoteric detail, but it's the kind of fact that actual obsessive Formula One fans will know. They'll be sat on their hands as constant exposition by unseen race commentators and, increasingly, onscreen characters guide newcomers through the action. Meanwhile, non-F1 audiences will be completely oblivious to the cavalcade of real-life figures in the sport.

This is, after all, made by F1 and for F1, and F1's PR division probably loves it. That connection was essential for the incredible access to the pits and tracks Kosinski required, allowing cinematographer Claudio

Miranda to give audiences the closest experience imaginable to being strapped to the front wing doing 200 mph down the back straight at Silverstone. Meanwhile the cast is given little to do other than grin and cheer and speed-read their lines. Kerry Condon is particularly ill-served as the first woman to become a team chief engineer, while Tobias Menzies may as well just wear a badge that says "treacherous corporate villain #1."

The real engine that keeps the movie moving isn't the cliched script or the spectacular race footage. It's Pitt. F1 puts him in the same tradition as Paul Newman, who used 1968's Winning to reverse his way into actual motorsports, or speed freak Steve McQueen, who got back into racing through 1971's Le Mans. It also shows he's a star of that magnitude. Without him, F1 would be spinning its wheels. **■

Digital Dreams Take Flight MUSIC

Dorio's Super Love 3 presents cohesive, creative worldbuilding BY CAROLINE DREW

Dorio's third album marks a new era of instrumental collaboration, and creative cohesion, for the pop project. The brainchild of Chad Doriocourt debuted in 2020 with the guitar-driven Yesterday the Sky Was Blue, laced with harmonies from Doriocourt's partner – and former Chronicle Music Editor – Rachel Rascoe, who hopped aboard as co-writer and core collaborator for 2023's hazy Strawberry Dream.

For this month's Super Love 3, the duo welcomed drummer CJ Eliassen, keyboardist David Alvarez, flutist Paulo Santos, and trumpeter Kenken Gorder into their home studio ("We call it living room pop instead of bedroom pop," Doriocourt quips). The result is a buoyant collection of complexly layered songs ripe for summer's picking – ready to be taken swimming, dancing, and road tripping.

Starting the record feels like powering up your DS with a new game cartridge. The dial-up tones of the opening track, "Welcome to Super Love 3," conjure an image of graphic saturation, delivered in cartoon pixels. Short, interstitial tracks like this one punctuate the album and draw on its world-within-itself feeling. Select "play now" to be transported via digital sprinkles into Super Love 3's landscape of sun-warmed melodies and fluttering electronic trills.

The first full-length song on the album, "Plastic Heart," is a boldly colored introduction to its sonic universe and lyrical themes.

The wistful lines meander through a cyclical routine of missing someone who is "not too far away" with plaintive melancholy, while the drum machine-inspired percussion remains tenaciously upbeat, surrounded by dreamy vocal sighs and magnetic guitar riffs.

Much of the album pairs the quotidian pitfalls of long-term love and the dogged anxieties of late-20s life with playful sonic nostalgia and saccharine earworms, leaving listeners to assume that it all must be all right. As deeply personal as its sharply written moments feel, there's something for everyone to relate to in the overthought, often-resolved feelings Dorio presents.

On "Air," a relatable cry for space in the face of emotional overwhelm becomes the kind of chorus crescendo you'd twirl your partner to. "Shadow on your eye/ You can barely cry/ Don't give up this time ... Air is what I need," Doriocourt and Rascoe sing together, as the refrain winds to a release. The sparse, internally observational language reveals an intensely private world that evokes a feeling of intrusion, alongside affinity.

"Stereo World" layers jazzy flute melodies with record scratches while toying with the comforts of being known and the temptation of reinvention. It takes on a twilight-toned atmosphere that bleeds into the final interlude of the album, fittingly titled "A Farewell."

Like a balloon escaping into the galaxy, cinematic keys and trumpet soar between interrupted satellite bleeps and distant audio clips as "A Farewell" fades out. Before the world of Super Love 3 can evaporate into the night, listeners are pulled back into "Everyday Feels Like Tomorrow," a day-dream anthem that summarizes the project's themes. "I need to lock you with a key/ It's a chemical release/ Tried pop psychology/ It didn't change my mind," Rascoe repeats, summarizing a mindloop of disillusionment and foregone resolutions as an arcade game riff and pensive vocal harmonies build on a looping guitar melody.

Dancing between analog and futuristic sounds, Super Love 3 feels like grownup indie pop that knows how to have a well-dressed breakdown and laugh about it afterward. Dorio's pop-fusion draws on sounds that span eras and infuses each note with their distinct sensibilities, landing in a world all its own. ■

The Luv Doc

Dear Luv Doc,

I have been going out with a guy I met through an old school friend since early March. He was exactly what I needed after ending a long, emotionally abusive relationship in late 2024. He has a lot of great qualities, and so far we haven't had any really rough patches, but I don't really connect with this guy emotionally like I have with other guys in the past. He's not a huge texter and when we do text it's mainly to plan getting together. We talk on the phone occasionally as well, but the conversations are mostly the same – logistical rather than just conversational. When we do get together it's pleasant enough, but I have to admit that what little chemistry I felt with him initially has waned even more, and I have found myself avoiding him sometimes because I'm just not feeling it. This guy really does tick a lot of boxes, but I find myself growing less and less interested. I keep wondering if I'm the problem and that I expect too much from a relationship. I also worry that if I break it off with this guy I will regret it later. Should I go ahead and end it, or try and work through my feelings of apathy?

– Gone Girl

It would truly be amazing if all relationships could maintain the all-consuming passion that often gets the ball rolling romantically. That shit is fire. Well, actually your clinical types prefer the term “limerence,” but to me, limerence sounds like a vocabulary word you have to memorize for a poetry quiz. It's basically a fancy word for infatuation. Nobody likes infatuation – not just because it has “fat” in the middle, but because when you use infatuation to describe a relationship, it's unavoidably insulting and dismissive. Hillbilly types and working-class rockers who don't have a lot of syllables to burn simply use the term “fire.” That sums it up pretty nicely. Infatuated people are consumed in a blaze of emotion that, conveniently for those in search of a handy metaphor, will eventually burn out. As Conway and Lo-rety sang it, “There's nothing cold as ashes after the fire is gone.” If I need to explain that any further, you should probably have done your homework before you moved to Texas.

Here's an interesting tidbit: There are cultures that don't place a lot of emphasis on romance. They feel that love is something that will most likely evolve from a predefined social construct like marriage or from the enduring obligation of raising a family. They're not entirely wrong. At least they're not diving into a huge commitment based on an unreliable surge of dopamine to the mesolimbic pathway. Sure, the heart wants what it wants, but judging by the divorce rate, the heart doesn't do a lot of high-level strategic thinking. Wait ... what am I saying? The heart doesn't do any thinking. It just pumps and flexes – like Schwarzenegger.

Look, I wouldn't be the Luv Doc if I was always popping off about the ridiculous impracticality of romantic relationships. Are they messy and unreliable? Yes. Do they cause a lot of emotional anguish, discontentment, and sadness? Sure, but the stakes of true emotional involvement are always high – whether that happens in the first few torrid months or over the grinding course of a lifetime. It is my belief, however, that emotions are the secret sauce of life. Absent a super chatty God, emotions are what gives life meaning. I wouldn't want to deny anyone their fair share of emotions – nor should you. That's why if you're not feeling it with this dude, the absolute best thing you can do for him and you is to break up. Sure, you might be wrong, and a few months down the road you might be hating yourself for messing up a really good thing, but it's really shitty to indefinitely string along someone you're not that into while you try to decide if your lack of feelings are due to some underlying psychosis you need to address. That's why Jesus invented therapists. Break up with this dude and go find one.

Mr. Smarty Pants Knows

Only about 0.5% of American adults identify as transgender.

The Mona Lisa became famous because the painting was stolen from the Louvre in 1911. Before that, the average person likely had never heard of it.

Around 1994, when he was just starting out, actor Adam Scott wanted to model himself after Ethan Hawke.

Researchers at the University of Copenhagen have determined Nevada, Louisiana, New York, and Texas are the states where you are most likely to encounter a psychopath.

After Apollo 11 astronauts returned to Earth in 1969, NASA officials were concerned they might carry some weird space microbes so they were put through a quarantine. According to a recent study, the quarantine may have been just for show.

“Not Feeling It”

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY JUNE 27 - JULY 3

by Rob Breznsky

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Welcome to a special edition of “What's My Strongest Yearning?” I'm your host, Rob Breznsky, and I'm delighted you have decided to identify the single desire that motivates you more than any other. Yes, you have many wishes and hopes and dreams, but one is more crucial than all the rest! Right? To begin the exercise, take three deep breaths and allow every knot of tension to dissolve and exit your beautiful body. Then drop down into the primal depths of your miraculous soul and wander around until you detect the shimmering presence of the beloved reason you came here to this planet. Immerse yourself in this glory for as long as you need to. Exult in its mysterious power to give meaning to everything you do. Ask it to nurture you, console you, and inspire you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): In certain medieval maps, unexplored territories were marked with the Latin phrase hic sunt dracones – “here be dragons.” It was a warning and a dare, a declaration that no one knew what lay beyond. In the coming weeks, Leo, you may find yourself traveling into one of those unlabeled regions. Rather than flinching or dodging, I invite you to press forward with respectful curiosity. Some of the so-called dragons will be figments. Others are protectors of treasure and might be receptive to sharing with a bright light like you. Either way, productive adventures are awaiting you in that unmapped territory. Go carefully – but go.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): In traditional Japanese carpentry, joints are made so skillfully that they need no nails, screws, or adhesives. Carpenters use intricate joinery techniques to connect pieces of wood so tightly that the structures are strong and durable. They often require a mallet for assembly and disassembly. In metaphorical terms, you are capable of that kind of craftsmanship these days, Virgo. I hope you will take advantage of this by building lasting beauty and truth that will serve you well into the future. Don't rush the joinery. If it's not working, don't force it. Re-cut, re-measure, breathe deeply, and try again.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Here's one of my unruly rules about human competence: In every professional field, from physicians to lawyers to psychics to teachers, about 15% of all the practitioners are downright mediocre, even deficient. Seventy-five percent are at least satisfactory and sometimes good. And 10% of the total are surpassingly excellent, providing an extraordinary service. With this in mind, I'm happy to say that you now have a knack for gravitating toward that exceptional 10% in every domain you are drawn to. I predict that your intuition will consistently guide you toward premium sources.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The Japanese concept of shinrin-yoku means “forest bathing.” It invites people to immerse themselves in the natural world, drawing on its restorative power. In accordance with astrological portents, I urge you Scorpios to maximize your forest bathing. To amplify the enrichment further, gravitate toward other environments that nourish your soul's need for solace and uplift. The naked fact is that you need places and influences that offer you comfort, safety, and tender inspiration. Don't apologize for making your life a bit less heroic as you tend to your inner world with gentle reverence.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The camera obscura was a precursor to modern cameras. It projected the outside world upside down onto interior walls. Artists loved it because it helped them see reality from new angles. I hereby proclaim that you, Sagittarius, will be like both the artist and the camera obscura lens in the coming weeks. Your perceptions may feel inverted, strange, even disorienting, but that's a gift! So let unfamiliarity be your muse. Flip your assumptions. Sketch from shadow instead of light. Have faith that the truth isn't vanishing or hiding; it's simply appearing in unfamiliar guises. Don't rush to turn right-side-up things. Relish and learn from the tilt.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): I'm sure you enjoy gazing into some mirrors more than others. It's amazing how different you might look in your bathroom mirror and the mirror in the restroom at work. Some store windows may reflect an elegant, attractive version of you, while others distort your image. A similar principle is at work in the people with whom you associate. Some seem to accentuate your finest attributes, while others bring out less flattering aspects. I bring this to your attention, dear Capricorn, because I believe it will be extra important in the coming weeks for you to surround yourself with your favorite mirrors.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Leonardo da Vinci filled thousands of pages with sketches, notes, and experiments. He never finished many of them. He called this compilation his “codex of wonder.” It wasn't a record of failures. It was an appreciation of his complex process and a way to honor his creative wellspring. Taking a cue from da Vinci's love of marvelous enigmas, I invite you to be in love with the unfinished in the coming weeks. Make inquisitiveness your default position. Reconsider abandoned ideas. Be a steward of fertile fragments. Some of your best work may arise from revisiting composted dreams or incomplete sketches. Here's your motto: Magic brews in the margins.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): In the remote Atacama Desert of Chile, certain flowers lie dormant for years, awaiting just the right conditions to burst into blossom in a sudden, riotous explosion of color and vitality. Scientists call it a superbloom. Metaphorically speaking, Pisces, you are on the verge of such a threshold. I'm sure you can already feel the inner ripening as it gathers momentum. Any day now, your full flowering will erupt – softly but dramatically. You won't need to push. You will simply open. To prepare yourself emotionally, start rehearsing lively shouts of “HALLELUJAH! HOORAY! WHOOPEE!”

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The Hawaiian word pō refers to a primal darkness from which all life flows. It's not a fearsome void, but a fertile mystery, rich with future possibilities and the ancestors' hopes. In the coming weeks, I invite you to treat your inner life as pō. Be as calm and patient and watchful as an Aries can be as you monitor the inklings that rise up out of the deep shadows. Have faith that the cloudy uncertainty will ultimately evolve into clarity, revealing the precise directions you need.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): In the 17th century, the Taurus polymath Athanasius Kircher constructed a fantastical machine called the Aeolian harp. It wasn't designed to be played by human fingers, but by the wind. It conjured music with currents invisible to the eye. I nominate this sublime contraption as your power object for the coming weeks, Taurus. The most beautiful and healing melodies may come from positioning yourself so that inspiration can blow through. How might you attune yourself to the arrival of unexpected help and gifts? Set aside any tendency you might have to try too hard. Instead, allow life to sing through you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The painter Vincent van Gogh wrote, “Great things are done by a series of small things brought together.” That's good advice for you right now. Your ambitions may feel daunting if you imagine them as monumental and monolithic. But if you simply focus on what needs to be done next – the daily efforts, the incremental improvements – you will be as relaxed as you need to be to accomplish wonders. Remember that masterpieces are rarely completed in a jiffy. The cumulative power of steady work is potentially your superpower. Here's another crucial tip: Use your imagination to have fun as you attend to the details.

OBITUARIES + MEMORIALS

GEORGE ROBERT RICHMOND

1957 - 2025

It is with great sadness that we share the passing of Bobby Richmond on June 14, 2025 at his home in Apopka, Florida.

Bobby was a compassionate, joyful man who loved animals (especially his rescued pets), listening to classic rock, collecting die-cast automotive memorabilia, and feeding squirrels and crows outside his garage man cave.

An excellent cook, he was a professional barbecue pitmaster for over 20 years, serving up some of the best bbq in central Florida. He drew tremendous joy from sharing his cooking with friends, family, and neighbors.

He is survived by his wife Gale Hoover-Richmond, who was his high school sweetheart and the love of his life. He is also survived by son Daegan Richmond and family, son Chase

Richmond, daughter Tiffany Summer Richmond, and by his step-children Stephen Rogers, Stephanie Chindamo, RT Rogers, and Brandon Soulier. He is also survived by his sister Doris Marion Richmond, niece Mimi Richmond Anderson, and aunt Linda Britto.

Bobby will be missed tremendously, and his humor and love of life will never be forgotten by those who loved him.

A memorial will be held at a later date with close family, friends and neighbors. In lieu of flowers please make donations in Bobby's name to Great Dane Love of Central Florida Rescue, Inc. 321-759-3263, gdlcf.org.
