HE GAVE ME MY LIFE BACK

Local clinic has a modern, medical solution to treat your Peripheral Neuropathy and is seeing incredible results!

"It started out as a normal outing. My wife and I had to run to the grocery store. We were driving down the road casually going over our shopping list when the car ahead of me started to slow down anticipating the yellow light. I started to move my foot from the gas to the brake as any normal person would do when they see brake lights in front of them but I couldn't. I couldn't feel my foot. The car kept moving forward and I just couldn't get my foot on the brake. And CRUNCH! I finally came to a stop when I hit the car in front of me."

This tragic story was shared with us by Fred S., an Austin resident who has peripheral neuropathy. And while no one was hurt in this accident, Fred S. had suffered almost everyday of his life with tingling and burning in his feet until numbness set in, and he could no longer feel even the brake pedal beneath his foot.

"The first stage is pain." Shares Dr. Lucas Brown of Rosedale Acupuncture & Wellness Center. "You feel burning, tingling, sharp pains, or you feel like you're walking on tacks or marbles. This pain eventually subsides and the numbness sets in. Unfortunately the numbness brings with it a whole other host of problems."

This was the case with Fred. "I said I wasn't going to drive again. What if that had been a pedestrian?"

It is terribly common that peripheral neuropathy and its debilitating symptoms interfere with a person's ability to live their life. Fred was now reliant on his wife to drive him around, even the simple pleasure of cruising the Hill Country or taking her out to dinner was outside his capabilities. And even more common, Fred's general practitioner and several specialists told him there was nothing they could do other than prescribe him pills that would ease the pain of his neuropathy.

That's where Dr. Brown and his staff at Rosedale Acupuncture & Wellness come in. "About 80% of our current patients come to us suffering from the same condition as Fred,' tells Dr. Brown.

"They're in constant pain from neuropathy and it prevents them from not only living their lives but more importantly, it prevents them from enjoying it. Depending on the severity of their nerve damage, we typically see tremendous progress in 3-4 months of treatment. I like to say we're in the business of making your golden years golden."

"I can't lie," confides Fred. "I was skeptical at first. The folks at the neurological clinic told me there was nothing that could be done and then there's a doctor right here in Austin who tells me he can help. Turns out he was right! About three months after treatment I was able to confidently drive myself to my appointments! My wife and I celebrated by buying ourselves a new car! It's hard to put into words how incredible this is, quite frankly [Dr. Brown] gave me my life back."

While Rosedale Acupuncture & Wellness specializes in acupuncture and it's definitely part of their protocols in treating neuropathy, the real secret is in a more modern medical solution called ATP Resonance BioTherapy™.

This technology was originally developed by NASA to expedite healing and recovery" shares Lauren, a Patient Care Technician at the clinic. "It's like watering a plant. ATP Resonance BioTherapy™ stimulates the blood vessels to grow back around the peripheral nerve and provide them the proper nutrients to heal and repair."

If you're ready to schedule a complimentary consultation, call (512) 623-1996 and a care coordinator will be happy to assist you.

Rosedale Acupuncture & Wellness now accepts Care Credit.

UNIVERSITY DIVIDED

Dear Editor,

At the end of last December, I retired from UT, where I had taught in the Department of French and Italian for over 30 years. While there has been a lot of deserved focus on the fate of gender studies at UT, the changes have been even more sweeping, and, I dare say, damaging. The College of Liberal Arts is slowly being reshaped (not to say eviscerated) to make way for faculty and offerings in line with the ideological direction of the current UT president, provost, and state government. There has been minimal consultation, and the major structural and curricular changes have been chaotic, driven by committees whose members don't come from the affected departments. My former department, French and Italian, was combined with Germanic Studies and Slavic and Eurasian Studies over the summer without giving the faculty a chance to develop a shared sense of purpose. Some of my colleagues have told me that they're simply waiting passively to learn what comes next. Despite official pronouncements to the contrary, the consolidation makes little pedagogical sense, and surely that is what matters most. If this is truly the Department of European and Eurasian Studies, why aren't Spanish and Portuguese included? The last time I checked, they were part of the European Union, too.

However, there is a bigger picture that should be emphasized: This is no way to run any large organization, let alone a university, which should be built on collaboration. Effective governance requires employees to feel invested in the organization's mission and to have a chance to help shape it. Faculty feel demoralized and excluded from the process. Let's not forget that UT President Jim Davis is not an educator in any sense of the word, but the current provost should know better.

JUST A THOUGHT

Dear Editor,

Just a thought: As our country slips toward "third world levels" would it be asking too much if we would have democratic nations provide objective poll monitors at some of our questionable voting stations come November?

TRULY CHILLING

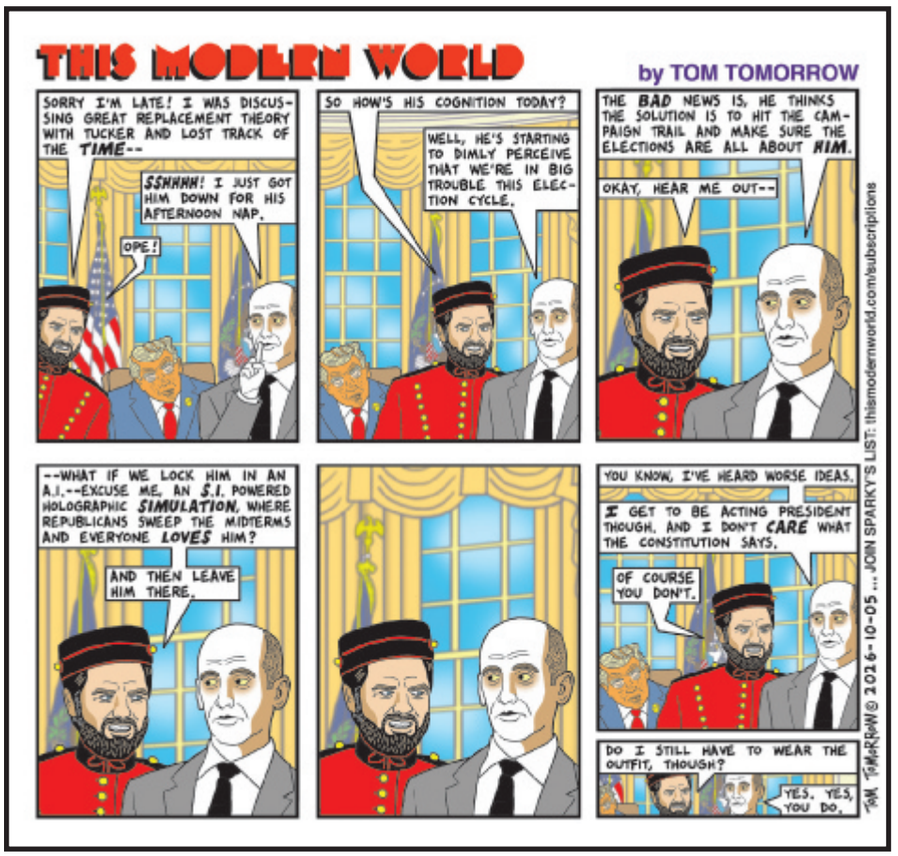

"ICE is the worst America has to offer. Firstly, it is unconstitutional to have rent-a-cops dressing in blue jeans and work boots, black bagging people without ANY due process. The [Constitution] states that every soul on US soil must have their day in court. Secondly, hunting down immigrants, when the majority of immigrants work and PAY TAXES! Yes, they pay taxes and can never receive social security benefits. Immigrants built this country, they pay in to this country just like we all do. Lastly, these racist 'agents' are unfit to carry a weapon and don't have the ability to maintain under pressure because they were only given a week of training and a gun. This is the worst of America. What are we going to do about it?"

TRAVIS COUNTY REGISTERING VOTERS: A few weeks ago, Texas election officials reported that an unknown amount of voter registration applications had yet to be processed due to a Texas Department of Public Safety error. Since then, county election staff throughout the state have rushed to process those voter applications, as DPS sent an additional 32,000 to Travis County, 18,000 to Williamson County, and 8,200 to Hays County. Some county election officials have expressed frustration with DPS's mistake, as they now have to comb through large backlogs of voter registration records. As the deadline drew nearer Monday, Oct. 5, election officials here in Travis County were still trying their damnedest to get voters registered, allowing registration locations to remain open through midnight. Early voting begins Oct. 19.

LOOSE LIPS IN THE GOP'S SHIP: Attorney General and U.S. Senate candidate Ken Paxton has done a great job of dodging questions related to his record and avoiding any debates with his Democratic opponent James Talarico. But now his private conversations are coming back to bite him in the ass, as leaked audio from last week shows Paxton criticizing the Republican Party's midterm convention, claiming that it actually hurt his candidacy. On Oct. 5, leaked audio reveals Paxton stating that he has no control over his campaign and that "it's all coming – you know – from D.C." And on Oct. 7, Axios obtained more audio that reveals Paxton claiming the Iran war and surging gas prices are his "biggest problem." As Paxton's loose lips potentially work to sink the GOP's ship, Talarico kept it short and sweet: "Ken Paxton is a puppet."

City Meets With Conservative Cicero Institute About New Homelessness Initiative

The revelation came during briefing on No Wrong Door program BY BRANT BINGAMON

First things first: Have Mayor Kirk Watson and the city's Homeless Strategies and Operations department been meeting with the Cicero Institute – the right-wing think tank working to sweep homeless people off the nation's streets?

That was one question at City Council's Tuesday work session, as city staff briefed the dais on the groundbreaking No Wrong Door program, which began operating this spring. No Wrong Door is designed to help people with complex mental health issues, who use extensive public resources by cycling from homelessness, to the county jail, to hospital treatment, and back onto the streets.

It appears there are two answers to the Cicero question. Watson, who was traveling and not at the work session, supplied the Chronicle with one of them: "My office has had no contact with the Cicero Institute regarding No Wrong Door."

HSO's David Gray, however, told Council on Tuesday that he has met with the Cicero Institute and with a similar statewide group, the Texas Public Policy Foundation. Gray explained that his office meets with people regardless of their political orientation, calling the meetings an "opportunity for us to educate them on the work that we're doing, so that they could help be champions for some of the causes that we are working towards." Carrie Rogers, who works at the city's Government Relations office, told Council she also attended a meeting with the groups.

TEXAS RANKS FIRST IN BOOK BANS:

According to a report from PEN America, a free speech advocacy nonprofit, Texas leads the country with the most book bans in public schools, totaling over 8,000 of about 12,000 in the U.S. as a whole. Florida came in second with a little more than 3,200. The report said that states like Texas are relying on artificial intelligence tools to determine which books should be prohibited in public schools "without consideration for nuance, context, or intent, speeding up censorship." The group also said that there has been a consistent attack on literature regarding race and racism, LGBTQ+ people or characters, people or characters of color, and sex. The report comes a little less than two months after Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick said that the state is "coming for the books" in public school districts throughout Texas.

ACL (MUD) FEST TAKES OVER ZILKER:

In case you were living under a rock, Weekend One of the Austin City Limits Music Festival took place Oct. 2-4, bringing over 100 artists from across the globe to Downtown Austin for three days of melodies, mosh pits, and ... mud. Yeah, this year's festival got a bit mucky, as rain began pouring last Thursday, Oct. 1, and carried on in waves throughout the weekend. Zilker Park got pretty roughed up on the first day of the festival, causing a two-hour delay on Saturday, as festival organizers worked to mitigate the muddy terrain, dumping mounds of mulch and laying strips of turf throughout. City Council Member Ryan Alter, who represents the area, released a statement on Saturday, saying that "the damage we've witnessed to the Great Lawn is unacceptable," and calling on the city and festival organizers to take action to make sure the conditions "never happen again." After the first weekend, Alter said that the festival's producers are on the hook for repairing the damage to the green space, per the city's agreement with C3 Presents.

CICERO INSTITUTE CONTINUED FROM P.10

This information will not sit well with Austin's advocate community, which denounces the Cicero Institute for its efforts to criminalize homelessness, including here in Austin. VOCAL-TX and other groups have worked to educate the public about Cicero and its leader, Joe Lonsdale, a tech billionaire who made his fortune as a co-founder of the government surveillance firm Palantir, which facilitates ICE detentions. Lonsdale is a close ally of Donald Trump, has called for public hangings, and wants Texas Republicans to strip Austin of the power to govern its own affairs.

The question of whether city officials are conferring with Cicero arose last week, after VOCAL-TX's Cate Graziani sent an email to Council saying she had learned that the mayor's office and HSO had held monthly meetings with the group. Also included with the email was a letter from the ACLU, local public defenders, and other advocates expressing concern about the role Austin police are playing in No Wrong Door.

The letter stated that Austin Police Department officers have visited people in jail and asked them to sign documents in connection with No Wrong Door without an attorney present. It stated that officers have collected personal information from potential participants and shared it with other city and county officials, something that could impact future criminal proceedings. It urged city leaders to either remove APD from the program or adopt safeguards to protect the civil rights of potential program participants.

The letter also stated that the city's Government Relations office has confirmed it is working with state lawmakers on legislation that would change how Texas responds to people with psychiatric and substance use disorders. It referred to a separate letter, sent from Mayor Watson to state Sen. Lois Kolkhorst on July 24, in which Watson proposes lowering the legal standard for involuntary psychiatric intervention for people participating in outpatient treatment programs, one of the goals of the Cicero Institute. However, the advocates also stated their support for some aspects of No Wrong Door, opening their letter by stating, "We share the program's goal of coordinating housing, treatment, and other services for people with complex behavioral needs, and we want that work to succeed."

> "My office has had no contact with the Cicero Institute regarding No Wrong Door."
> MAYOR KIRK WATSON

No Wrong Door was described at Tuesday's Council meeting as a creative and ambitious program sitting at the intersection of public safety, behavioral health, and homelessness. It brings together 17 groups, including public safety agencies, local hospitals, nonprofits, and public health providers, to develop individual treatment plans for the most vulnerable people in our community. These people were identified in a study released in August by the Meadows Mental Health Policy Institute, which estimates that 950 Travis County residents, referred to as "high utilizers," cycle through jail cells, hospital rooms, and homeless services programs.

According to the study, the high utilizers made up 2% of the total number of people arrested by police from 2021 to 2025, but about one-sixth of all arrests – meaning they were arrested and rearrested frequently. Of those arrested, 85% had experienced homelessness. Over half had experienced behavioral health issues like schizophrenia and substance use disorder. The study estimated that this continued cycle costs about $144,000 per person, $137 million annually.

City staff suggested on Tuesday that No Wrong Door is already producing results. Maris Herold, APD's chief of strategic initiatives, told Council that providers began offering services to 99 of the high utilizers in May. Three months later, she said, data shows that calls from program participants to police fell by 31%, from one call every 11 days to one every 16 days. For the 28 highest-risk participants, calls dropped 57%. One high utilizer, referred to as Oscar in the study, had monthly calls to police and EMS drop by 74% and 66%, respectively.

But many who commented on No Wrong Door said they are uncomfortable with the program's surveillance and carceral overtones. "Medical providers cannot be placed in an ethical quandary where clinical care becomes a pathway to surveillance or enforcement," Snehal Patel, a public health provider, told Council. "Our clients' liberty, autonomy, and defense are at stake," said attorney Bradley Hargis of the Capital Area Private Defender Service. "Good intentions cannot substitute for access to counsel."

Some of the most compelling arguments in support of the program came from Herold, who noted that unhoused women with mental illness are 20 times more likely than others to be sexually assaulted. Herold demonstrated that city staff know many of the high utilizers personally because of their frequent encounters with them, describing a chronically homeless woman named Mary who Herold said is being trafficked for sex.

"Mary's been living on the streets of Austin for decades," Herold said. "She has cycled in and out of that horrible, vicious cycle that we're all talking about, it's hard to count how many times. But what's sad to me is, when you talk about Mary, the data almost stops a couple of years ago. And that's because everybody has just stopped thinking that the systems in place can help Mary."

Herold, Gray, and other city staff pledged to continue refining No Wrong Door to address civil rights concerns. Gray also offered a take on the controversial subject of involuntary commitment. "There is no liberty in releasing someone from jail just to have them die on our streets," Gray said. "For some of our clients, the best possible outcome we can hope for is inpatient, long-term treatment." ■

WATSON NAMES GENATX EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR: On Thursday, Oct. 1, Mayor Kirk Watson announced that Fran Baylor will serve as the first executive director of Generation ATX – Watson's citywide initiative to make Austin the best city in America to live in as a child. According to the city's press release, Baylor has over 15 years of background in establishing relationships and partnerships aimed at economic mobility and opportunity for youth and their families. Watson also named the members who will serve on the movement's steering committee. The new executive director will now be tasked with bringing the community together to advance GenATX's "Five Goals in Five Years."

AUSTIN UNVEILS BOND DASHBOARD: Austin launched a new online dashboard that allows residents to track projects funded through its 2016, 2018, 2020, and 2022 General Obligation Bonds. According to the city, the tool provides information on project funding and spending and allows users to search by bond year, proposition, or individual project. Residents can also track the progress of projects, as additional improvements are planned as the city rolls out the web page.

AISD CHOSEN FOR STATE AUDIT: Acting Comptroller Don Huffines announced on Monday, Oct. 5, that he has selected four Texas public school districts to be audited, as formally requested by Gov. Greg Abbott in August: Austin ISD, Barbers Hill ISD, El Paso ISD, and Prosper ISD. The audit, coined the Huffines Performance Review, "will examine whether district spending complies with state law and is directed toward students, classrooms, and teachers – rather than toward administrative expansion or non-instructional bureaucracy." According to the press release, the final report must be completed by the end of the year, "providing the 90th Legislature sufficient time to consider any recommendations for reform."

After Garces Perez Has Surgery to Remove Bullet, Austin Lawyer Questions Dell Seton

Eleven days after being shot by a U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement agent, Wilber Rafael Garces Perez finally had surgery to remove the bullet in his upper back last Thursday, Oct. 1, according to one of his attorneys, Kate Lincoln-Goldfinch.

Garces Perez had told press during a Sept. 21 press conference that the bullet hadn't been removed during his Sept. 20 visit to the hospital because it was too close to his spine. Austin's Dell Seton Medical Center had released Garces Perez into ICE custody only four hours after being shot with the bullet still in his body.

Now, Dell Seton's actions on Sept. 20 are being questioned by Austin-area Catholic advocates and the founder of the Texas Civil Rights Project, attorney Jim Harrington. In an Oct. 5 letter, after Garces Perez's bullet had been removed, they asked the hospital why Garces Perez was released into immigration detention before his medical treatment was fully completed.

"We are also concerned that, if Dell Seton was unable or unwilling to continue his care, he was not transferred to another appropriate medical facility or medical professionals who could do so. Instead, ICE transported Mr. Garcés-Pérez to the Pearsall detention center, which is not a medical facility," they wrote.

On Sept. 22, an Ascension Seton spokesperson wrote to the Chronicle and other outlets that "established procedures and policies related to interactions with law enforcement" were "strictly followed" by the hospital that day.

"We find that response troubling. If the circumstances surrounding Mr. Garcés-Pérez's release were indeed consistent with standard procedures, then we believe those procedures themselves warrant careful review," the letter's co-signers continued, demanding that Dell Seton and Ascension Seton explain "what policies govern the treatment, discharge, and transfer of patients who are in ICE custody or who may be taken into ICE custody."

ICE'S BODY CAM FOOTAGE

Just a day before his surgery to remove the bullet from his back, last Wednesday, Sept. 30, Garces Perez appeared in federal court in Austin under a new criminal charge: that Garces Perez had used his vehicle as a "dangerous and deadly weapon," hit an ICE agent with his side mirror, and attempted to hit the agent a second time before being shot on Sept. 20, per the U.S. Department of Homeland Security.

The federal government made that argument before U.S. Magistrate Judge Dustin Howell, bringing in Rick Bazan, a DHS agent investigating Garces Perez's case, to testify. They also showed the court footage taken by one of the involved ICE agents' body-worn camera, which has not been made public. The agent who shot Garces Perez was not wearing a body camera that day, Bazan testified.

According to Bazan, in North Austin on the day Garces Perez was shot, the two ICE agents were doing "random checks in random places," running license plate numbers through an online database to try to find people "to remove from the United States."

ICE agents had pulled over Garces Perez after running his license plate while he was inside a restaurant. Once pulled over, the body camera footage captured a conversation in Spanish between Garces Perez and the masked ICE agent who shot him, during which the agent identified himself as "immigration" and refused Garces Perez's request to re-park his car himself.

Soon after, Garces Perez rolled up his window and drove off, which DHS claims is the moment he struck the ICE agent in the torso with his driver's side mirror. What followed was a vehicle pursuit, the two ICE agents' unmarked SUVs pursuing Garces Perez's blue Toyota sedan.

Both the ICE agents and Garces Perez ran through stop signs and traffic lights, Bazan testified, and the ICE agents' vehicle lights and sirens were activated. The video showed the agent with the body camera calling someone, saying, "We're in the middle of a pursuit right now."

Even from the body camera footage, it's evident the ICE agent drove at high speeds, making multiple turns. He laughed while pursuing Garces Perez.

That ICE agent apparently lost Garces Perez and his partner and called his partner to no answer. About two minutes later, the partner called back to report that he had shot Garces Perez after "he had tried to strike him with his vehicle," Bazan testified.

As of the day of the hearing, the Austin Police Department had not received those evidentiary materials for the new criminal charge from DHS. "APD remains in communication with HSI [Homeland Security Investigations] and has requested evidentiary materials be shared within a specified timeframe. Those materials have not yet been received, and APD's investigation remains active and ongoing," a spokesperson wrote to the Chronicle on Sept. 30.

Judge Howell denied Garces Perez bond on Sept. 30 and released him back into federal criminal custody. Howell decided that Garces Perez presents a flight risk, citing that Garces Perez had fled from the ICE agents on Sept. 20 and that most of his family still lives in Venezuela.

On Sept. 30, a memo obtained by the Associated Press ordered ICE agents to no longer engage in vehicle pursuits under any circumstances. "You should have done this a long time ago, ICE," Lincoln-Goldfinch said on social media. ■

Austin Asks for Feedback as It Considers Rules for Large Water Users

Austin Water proposed new requirements for developments using more than 85 million gallons a year

BY ERIKA GONZALEZ

Dozens of residents walked between displays about water conservation, reuse, and consumption Monday, Oct. 5, at the city of Austin Permitting and Development Center, as Austin Water officials asked them to consider one question: How should the city manage its largest water users?

The city's water wonks presented some possible answers.

"Tonight, we're having an open house where we're really seeking our community input and feedback on some new policies and procedures that we're considering for high-impact water users," said Shay Ralls Roalson, director at Austin Water.

The discussion comes after City Council passed a resolution in July, aimed at addressing the impacts large water users have on the city's utility. City Manager T.C. Broadnax must present recommendations to the Climate, Water, Environment, and Parks Committee by Dec. 9. The first report on large users' water consumption is due by May 2027.

At the open house, Austin Water proposed implementing new requirements for developments that use or are projected to use more than 85 million gallons of water a year. They also suggested that large water users produce detailed conservation plans, annual reports, and water budgets, which would limit the amount of water a customer could use. Under the proposal, if customers were to exceed those budgets, they would face higher rates. The utility is also considering requiring large users to update their conservation plans every five years and set five- and 10-year goals.

As Austin prepares for growth and drought and data centers continue to be constructed throughout the state, the Oct. 5 discussion is part of the early steps the city is taking to regulate developments within city limits.

Austin Water's draft defines a "high-impact water user" as one or more commercial buildings, including industrial and manufacturing facilities, that uses or is projected to use more than 85 million gallons of water a year. The calculation would include both drinking and non-drinking water.

Some requirements for these customers already exist. New commercial and multifamily projects must report how they plan to use water, while developments of 250,000 square feet or more face additional water reuse requirements, according to Austin Water.

Along with those guidelines, City Council passed an ordinance in 2023 that requires developers to pay for utility infrastructure costs, which prevents utility rates from surging for residential customers.

"We already have really strong financial practices that are industry leading to make sure that the costs of delivering high-quality water and wastewater and reclaimed water services to all of our customers are borne equitably by each customer class," Roalson said.

One way large water users can reduce their reliance on the city's drinking water supply is to connect to Austin's reclaimed water system. Reclaimed water is treated wastewater that can be reused for purposes that do not require drinking water, such as irrigation, toilet flushing, and cooling systems.

Austin Water also uses a Water Benchmarking Application to understand how a project plans to use water and help customers identify conservation opportunities before construction is underway.

"That provides us with information about how they will be using water on their site and what their opportunities are for water conservation, for reclaimed water use, for on-site water reuse," Roalson said.

Although data centers were a focus of some residents' concerns, Roalson said the proposals are not aimed only at the industry.

"Tonight's discussion is really about high-impact water users, regardless of what kind of development it is," Roalson said.

In 2025, high-impact commercial customers accounted for 10.2% of Austin's total water use, according to Austin Water data presented at the open house. Residential customers accounted for 60.1%.

Carol Phillips, who lives in Northwest Austin, said she is concerned not only about the water data centers directly consume, but the indirect water used to generate the electricity that powers them. That indirect water use occurs at power generation facilities rather than at the data center itself and is not reflected in the facility's direct water consumption.

"How can you even plan this critical infrastructure without knowing every drop you're using?" Phillips said. "This is scary."

Brad Knowles echoed Phillips' remarks, stating that the city should consider a data center's broader water footprint, rather than only the water used directly at the facility.

"We can't just look at what that one data center itself is requiring," Knowles said. "We have to look at the total cost of ownership." Or, as he put it: "We have to look at the whole enchilada." ■

Some Immigrant Children Face Trial Without Legal Representation Thanks to Trump

The administration withheld federal funding, causing the services to expire in August

BY ERIKA GONZALEZ

Across the country, children face immigration proceedings that could determine whether they can remain in the United States. Some of them are doing so without any legal representation. Since July 31, immigrant minors have had to navigate those proceedings without an attorney by their side, following the Trump administration's decision to withhold funding from a federal legal services program.

The decision led to the expiration of a partnership between the U.S. government and the Acacia Center for Justice, whose network had provided legal services to more than 20,000 unaccompanied children – a minor who has no lawful immigration status in the United States and has no parent or legal guardian in the country available to provide care and physical custody.

Dalia Castillo-Granados, director of the Children's Immigration Law Academy at the American Bar Association, said legal services for immigrant minors have varied across organizations following the disruptions in federal funding. Some organizations found other sources of funding or continued working on existing cases, while others reduced staff.

"The organizations that have been working with children are unable to provide the same legal services," Castillo-Granados said.

The end of the contract does not necessarily mean that all of the more than 20,000 children automatically lost legal representation. Trudy Taylor Smith, senior administrator of policy and advocacy at Children's Defense Fund-Texas, said some attorneys have continued representing children even without being paid.

"Many attorneys are doing their best to continue representing these kids as long as they possibly can, even without pay," Taylor Smith said.

A JOURNEY THAT IS NOT OVER

Four years ago, the son of a Mexican woman left with a smuggler. He was 14. He swam across the Rio Grande and was detained by immigration authorities.

For three or four days, his mother (she asked not to have her name published due to immigration concerns), who was already living in the United States, did not know where he was.

"I was worried because I thought, 'Oh, my son isn't answering me. How is he? What happened to them?'" she recalled in Spanish.

He was later transferred to the Office of Refugee Resettlement, the federal agency responsible for the care and placement of unaccompanied children. ORR later contacted his mother as a potential sponsor.

Although his mother was already in the country, authorities processed him as an unaccompanied child because he had arrived without a parent or legal guardian traveling with him.

But leaving federal custody did not end his immigration case. His mother received his A-number, a government-issued identification number used in immigration proceedings, and began checking the court system to find out when he had to appear before a judge.

Over the next four years, he continued attending immigration hearings.

Days before his April 2026 hearing, the now-18-year-old kept telling his mother about the same fear. He had to travel from Austin to San Antonio to appear before an immigration judge again

"Mom, I'm scared they're going to get me," his mother recalled him saying. "I honestly don't want to go back to my country. I want to be here with you."

When the day of the hearing came, she did not go with him.

"I feel really bad when he goes by himself," she said.

His mother waited outside the courthouse, fearful that entering could result in her detention.

The hearing ended without a resolution. His case remains open, and he is scheduled to return to court in April 2027.

WHEN THERE IS NO LAWYER AT THE TABLE

For a child without an attorney, even understanding what a judge is asking can be difficult, said Marcela Evans, managing attorney at the Texas Immigration Law Council.

"If they don't have an attorney, they don't have anybody sitting with them at the table when they're talking to the judge," Evans said. "They don't have somebody who understands maybe what the judge is even asking them."

In Texas, ORR reported that 3,418 unaccompanied children were released to sponsors during fiscal year 2025, including 316 in Travis County. But those numbers do not show how many of those children currently have attorneys representing them in immigration proceedings.

Determining how many unaccompanied children in Texas are currently without an attorney is difficult, said Krystal Gómez, interim director of the children's immigration network at Children at Risk.

Nationally, data from the Transactional Records Access Clearinghouse shows the share of completed immigration court cases with legal representation fell from 63% in fiscal year 2021 to 32% in fiscal year 2026, though it does not specifically account for unaccompanied children.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Office of Public Affairs told the Chronicle that ORR provided a grant supplement to the U.S. Committee for Refugees and Immigrants on Aug. 5 to provide temporary representation for children in ORR custody. The office also said that on Aug. 25, ORR expanded its cooperative agreement with USCRI to include appearances at immigration hearings, legal consultations, and direct representation for unaccompanied children and that it is providing legal representation and legal orientation for children in ORR custody nationwide, including in Texas.

ORR also said a review found that between November and March, at least 3,500 children per month did not have a notice of legal representation filed with the Department of Homeland Security or the Executive Office for Immigration Review.

An HHS spokesperson told ABC News that ORR had offered Acacia a new contract requiring the organization to provide information about the children it represented and submit invoices when filing applications for immigration relief. The organization said it rejected that bridge contract "because it would have required legal service providers to turn over confidential client information" to receive payment.

"HAVE FAITH, MOM"

Having an attorney has not ended the young man's court hearings. Before his April hearing, his mother said he was worried about the possibility of being deported.

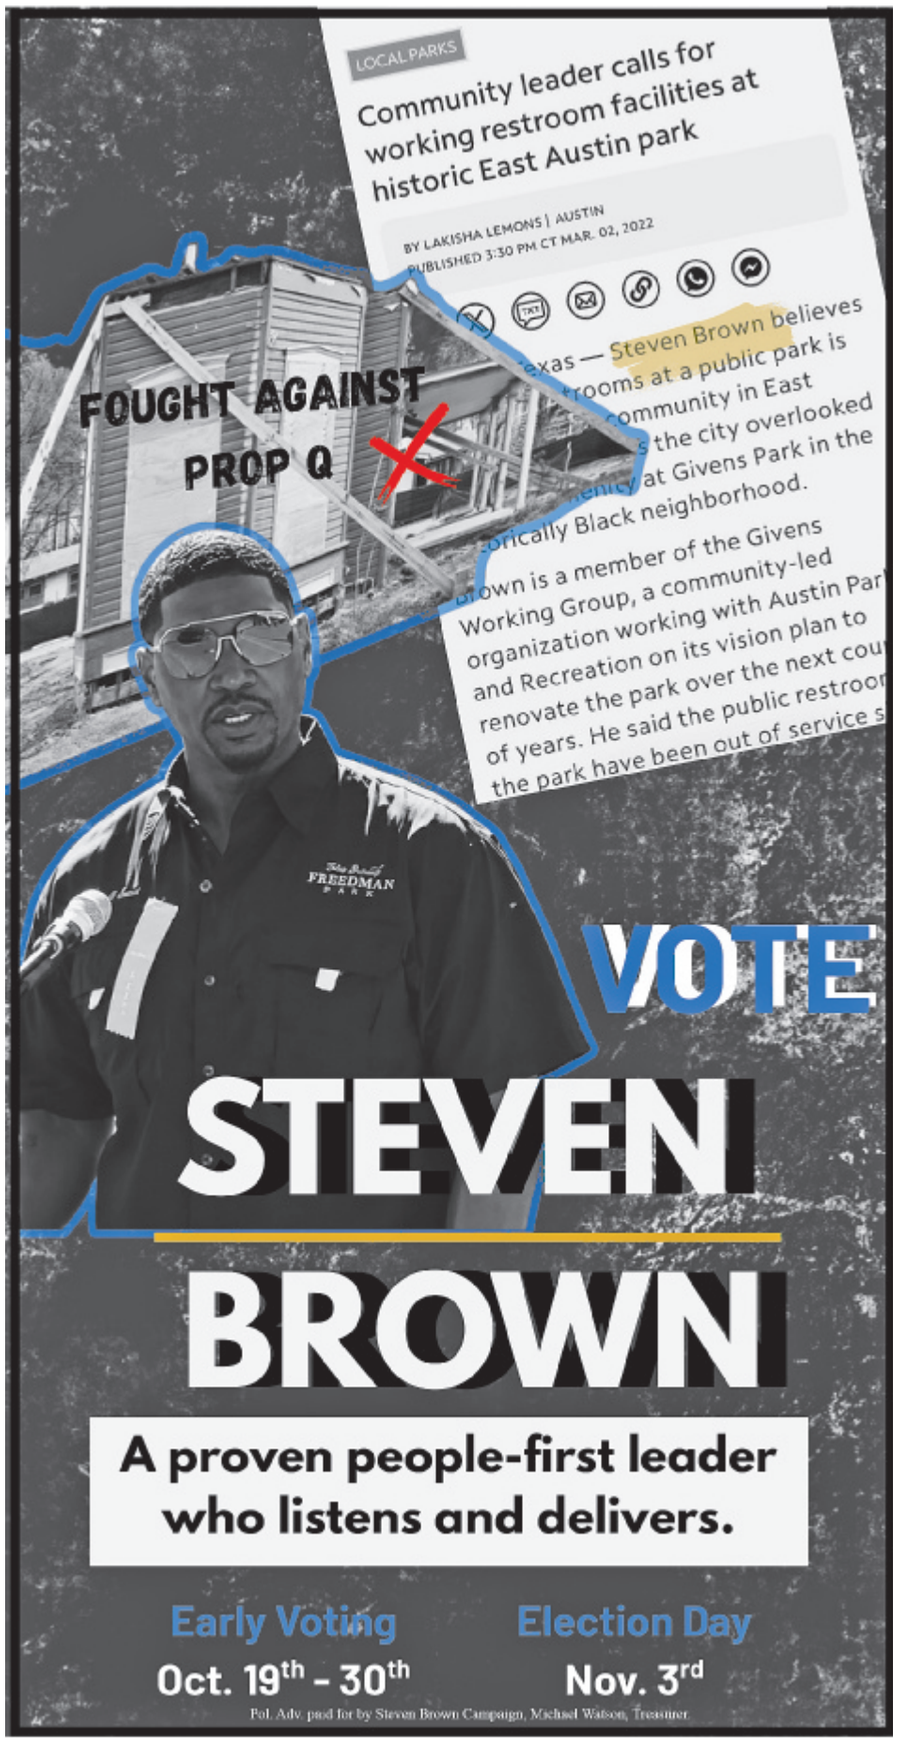

"Well, I'm scared. I'm scared," she recalled him saying.

Four years ago, she spent days not knowing where her son was. Today, he lives with her, continues his studies, and has an attorney. His immigration case remains open.

His mother said her own fear of immigration enforcement has made her reluctant to leave home, even for routine errands such as going to the grocery store.

In April 2027, he is scheduled to return to court. When his mother starts worrying about what could happen, she said, sometimes her son is the one who tries to reassure her.

"Have faith, Mom," he tells her. "Everything is going to be OK." ■

Muddy Grounds, Electronic Sounds: Reports From ACL Weekend One

Weather was on everyone's mind – this columnist wonders about genre trends too

There's no such thing as bad weather, only bad clothing – or so goes a Norse proverb commonly cited in my Midwestern upbringing.

It's a sentiment that served ACL Weekend One attendees well because, while there's little you can do clothing-wise to simultaneously tackle the heat, sun, and dust typical of October in Texas, a good pair of boots will protect against mud pretty reliably. Add a weatherproof jacket for the light showers that fell Friday and Sunday and you just might've enjoyed the lower temperatures and overcast skies.

Ahead of the festival, representatives for C3, the event producers behind ACL, told the Chronicle that they were already clearing drains around the park, pre-positioning drying equipment, and adjusting their setup schedule to respond to the roughly inch-and-a-half of rain that fell Thursday.

Morning squeegee and vacuum truck sessions and endless applications of mulch were little match for the many stomping feet churning Zilker Park into a mud pit. When gates opened two hours late on Saturday, backhoe loaders were still pushing the sloppiest of the slop into cordoned-off piles and staff continued laying down turf and plywood over some of the muddiest areas throughout the day. Light Sunday afternoon showers certainly didn't help, but didn't seem too detrimental either. In a statement, festival organizers told the Chronicle that they were bringing in extra resources starting Sunday night to remove temporary turf and ground protection.

"We will prioritize rest and recovery of the park this week by strictly limiting activity on the grounds before next weekend," they wrote. "Assessment of the grounds is underway, and we will meet daily with Austin Parks and Recreation to prepare for remediation after the festival."

Longtime attendees recalled the torrential downpours of 2009 and organizers' use of Dillo Dirt, a trademarked compost created at Austin Water's Hornsby Bend Biosolids Management Plant that combines yard waste and heat-treated sewage waste to create a recycled soil product (one tested by the Environmental Protection Agency and Texas Commission on Environmental Quality). Veteran C3 Presents operations employee Mike Walker took to TikTok to dispel rumors that the mixture was still in use, likely because squeamish citizens can't separate the idea of poop from scientific processes proven to not carry pathogens.

Dirt and mulch of all varieties don't always have the most pleasant odor, but this year's slop seemed to cause far less stink and strife and, by Sunday, festivalgoers appeared to have made peace with the swamp. We'll see what that means for the grounds of Weekend Two.

JUST DANCE: ELECTRONIC INFLUENCE DOMINATES LINEUP

Geese's "100 Horses" didn't make it onto their Sunday set list, but its final line echoed in my head as my poorly coordinated hips grew practiced throughout Weekend One: "There is only dance music in times of war."

No rap or country artists are among this year's headliners, as festival fans and music nerds were quick to point out when the lineup was announced. Club-friendly, electronic-embracing artists seem to have filled the gaps, as their place in mainstream culture – and similar festival lineups – increases. Assigning causation is a losing game, but it's tempting to examine this trend running parallel to broader sociopolitical happenings.

Friday headliner Charli xcx can be credited with ushering in the mainstream attention shift to dance music. Her momentous 2024 BRAT album brought unwieldy feelings into the club, musing over feminine insecurities and familial reflections within a genre generally associated with three-word stanzas and vague repetitions – when lyrics are present at all. This year's Music, Fashion, Film finds her dabbling in darker sounds and themes, asserting that "the world is gonna end" and none of those three creative disciplines can stop it. Merch shirts stamped with a line from David Cronenberg's spoken-word monologue on the album dotted the muddy grounds: "Oblivion is freedom."

Thousands of stomping feet churned Zilker Park into a mud pit during the first weekend of ACL DAVID BRENDAN HALL

"By Sunday, festivalgoers appeared to have made peace with the swamp. We'll see what that means for the grounds of Weekend Two."

A jaded shrug and a drive for physiological release on the sweaty dance floor pulse through Geese and Charli xcx's end-times lyricism. Different beats-per-minute options for letting go were offered by dubstep producer Skrillex, DJ duo SOFI TUKKER, laser-loving EDM trio Levity, electronic acts Snow Strippers and Fcukers, and hyperpop artist underscores. The xx and Lykke Li's strains of dreamy indie-pop fit into the mix too, with the former remixing some of their 2010s hits into bass-pounding dance tracks. Pop artists like Lorde and Rebecca Black have infused recent releases with more house and techno-inspired elements. Everyone seems to want a shot at their track lighting up the dance floor. Even on the rock side of things, clear tones were hard to come by this year, with distortion-praising, punk-inspired acts like Amyl & the Sniffers and Turnstile stirring mosh pits and fueling a different-yet-similar release.

Given Austin's outlaw country reputation, two-stepping tradition, and last year's emphasis on the genre, it was startling to spot roots-inspired Americana acts only in the smaller print. Folk singer Jesse Welles drew a crowd for his politically pointed tunes on Friday, and up-and-coming traditionalist Coleman Jennings carried the weakly lit torch.

In these cash-strapped times, I've heard jokes that electronic music is popular now because there's fewer people to pay – a theory that doesn't explain the dearth of rappers.

Rap has had a notoriously difficult time flourishing in the Live Music Capital, but one or two rappers have reliably headlined the Zilker Park-hosted festival since Kanye West's appearance in 2011. Last year, viral swamp princess Doechii and Auto-Tune pioneer T-Pain drew giant crowds across generations. Bad Bunny is the genre's latest star, and while absent from the festival circuit, fellow Puerto Rican rapper Young Miko performed their duet "FINA" Saturday in the closest thing to a headlining rap set in store this year. The rise of Latin rap certainly feels ironic given the inhumane treatment of immigrants at the hands of Trump's administration and ICE, a dissonance between cultural appreciation and physical mistreatment not unfamiliar to the rap world.

Both rap and country have historically been touted as voices of the proletariat, specificity-prizing storytelling vessels that have struggled to receive their dues from gatekeeping institutions. The same might be said of electronic music in regard to institutional ignorance, but its reflection of human emotion falls more on the side of communal catharsis than empathetic recognition. One year's lineup is no prediction model for the next, nor a perfect encapsulation of music trends, but it seems festival organizers bet on the idea that audiences wanted to turn their brains off as the beat dropped. The mud-braving crowds seem to have agreed. ■

Meet the Candidates Vying for Five City Council Seats

A referendum on the last four years comes to local ballots

Art by Zeke Barbaro / Getty Images

Austin voters cemented a generational shift in 2022 by electing five City Council candidates who embraced the city planning philosophy of New Urbanism. Those elected became part of a supermajority dedicated to using market forces to bring down home prices by encouraging the construction of dense, mixed-use housing and effective public transit.

That supermajority went on to pass the Home Options for Mobility and Equity reforms, which allow three dwellings on a single lot and reduce the minimum lot sizes on which houses can be built, along with other urban-oriented measures.

But a lot has changed in the last four years. 2023 was the high-water mark – so far, anyway – of the insane increases in housing costs that the Council members had campaigned on. By the end of 2024, housing prices had stabilized. However, years of inflation had reduced Austinites' purchasing power. In November, residents defeated Proposition Q, a proposal to increase property taxes, demonstrating that their concerns had broadened from housing affordability to the cost of living in general.

So now, we're living in a hybrid moment. We're asked to evaluate how the urbanist Council has done on housing. We're asked to consider their work on the massive infrastructure projects initiated before the city's budget went south – Project Connect, the convention center, and Cap and Stitch. We're asked to determine how fiscally responsible the dais has been after spending over $1 million on a logo last fall while still asking residents for more money. And we're asked to assess how transparent Council has been with the community, following decisions like the Dog's Head agreement, where they rushed a vote – with minimal public input – to annex 2,600 acres of land to be developed with little oversight.

Now, we decide the next four years.

District 1: The Race to Represent East Austin

Uneven fundraising and Ramos' arrest could affect how Austin decides the seat

BY SAMMIE SEAMON

For the last eight years, Austin City Council Member Natasha Harper-Madison has represented District 1, one of Austin's biggest districts that stretches all the way from parts of East Seventh Street to north of East Parmer Lane in the Dessau area, out to the city's eastern boundary.

It's now time to change hands. District 1 residents will soon choose between six candidates to succeed Harper-Madison on Nov. 3. And after the last eight years, many East Austin residents feel underrepresented by their city's government.

"People want to be able to engage and see their Council member, and that has fluctuated for a number of reasons in our district," candidate Alexandria Anderson told the Chronicle. "For me, it's that people know where they can find me, and that I'll show up."

At candidate forums, East Austin residents have brought up issues that they'd like to see better addressed by their future Council member: affordability and rapid gentrification, the shuttering of their neighborhood public schools, chronic cycles of homelessness in their community, public safety in their local parks and libraries, and the lack of shade and transportation in some areas.

Several strong contenders hope to win the seat this election cycle. Portia Riggins and Steven Brown are the native East Austinites of the group, and both have deep roots in the community. Riggins, who has experience working at Texas REALTORS, the Travis Central Appraisal District, and Austin 311, stressed the need to coordinate social services to address mental health and substance abuse challenges.

"I came from a low-income family, public housing, not seeing improvements," Riggins said. "These underserved inner communities in District 1 … we can pour back into them and actually have someone who knows where these neighborhoods are."

Brown, a fourth-generation Austinite, healthcare professional, and neighborhood youth football coach, told us he advocated for the Austin Fire Department to hire more Black firefighters after what many claimed to be a discriminatory hiring season in 2012. "I think that we really need to start with community engagement and being radically transparent," he said.

Brown led efforts to defeat Proposition Q back in November as the Democratic co-chair for PAC Save Austin Now. "My friends and family can't afford to see a 20% tax increase. These things led to gentrification and the destabilization of my community," Brown said. He also discussed rent-subsidizing programs to make vacant affordable units more deeply affordable.

Anderson has lived in Austin since 2005 as an ex-UT and Nike sprinter, small-business owner, chair of the city's Commission for Women, and longtime community advocate in East Austin. Considering District 1 is so large, Anderson proposed breaking it up into four quadrants and setting up "community advisory committees" in each to help bring neighborhood issues to the city's attention, "including existing housing, upcoming development, infrastructure gaps, transit access, sidewalks, drainage, and stormwater concerns," she wrote to the Chronicle.

In addressing homelessness, Anderson believes that the city needs to collaborate with the organizations that are already doing the work. "They're already touching hundreds of people weekly, all around the city," she said. "It's being able to rely on their knowledge about what's working and what's not working, and then helping to push policy from that standpoint."

Other candidates bring different kinds of expertise to the table. Amber Goodwin is a former attorney in the Travis County District Attorney's Office and a longtime labor organizer and union member, as supported by her Texas AFL-CIO endorsement. She's also the founder of a minority-led gun violence prevention nonprofit that has advocated for successful gun safety bills.

With District 1 stretching toward Manor, Del Valle, and Pflugerville, Goodwin emphasized that an even stronger city connection to Travis County funding and resources is needed at City Hall – and she's already built those county-level relationships at the D.A.'s Office.

"I want to work with our county partners, put together a meeting, and look at where there's already county support for things like Integral Care, for Central Health … and how we can best serve the people who have the most need, including mental health services for the people who are unhoused," Goodwin said. "I want to have a real focus on healthcare access, and start to build a community health hub."

When it comes to fundraising, Goodwin raised over $91,000 in the first six months of the year – more than all the other candidates combined. Anderson and Misael Ramos raised the second and third highest amounts, respectively.

Ramos, endorsed by the National Democratic Socialists of America, is the president of his neighborhood association and former chair of the Blackland Community Development Corporation, where he supported affordable housing development. He was also recently arrested for participating in a protest against ICE's Sept. 20 shooting of Wilber Rafael Garces Perez.

Ramos said he doesn't agree with how Council has addressed housing, calling their strategy "market driven." He questioned if the city's Home Options for Mobility and Equity zoning changes, passed by Council starting in 2023, have actually led to more affordable housing in East Austin.

"The majority of HOME developments are here in East Austin, and they're not affordable. They're being done by LLCs and other groups, and not by the families that live here," Ramos said. "We need to be more intentional about who we're building for, and how those affordability rates and land value appreciations impact people who are already here."

Ramos also has publicly advocated against state takeover of Austin ISD, and for the potential reuse of historic and soon-closing Blackshear Elementary as a childcare or community center.

Michael Nahas is an economist and previously served on Austin's Economic Prosperity Commission. He told the Chronicle he has studied the city's housing and would want to tackle the budget if elected. He pointed us to the amount of money Austin owes to pension funds. He has not fundraised or block-walked as part of his campaign, rather funding himself.

"[District 1 residents] want more affordability, lower rents. They want lower taxes. … And people want the city government to spend money better," Nahas emphasized. "And so, based on that, I decided to run."

Every candidate expressed wanting to bring their skills to Council that may otherwise be absent. To name a few, Ramos said he would be Council's housing expert; Nahas is an expert on finance; Brown brings his knowledge as a healthcare worker; Riggins has experience working with data from her accounting background; Goodwin is deeply knowledgeable about public safety; and as a city commission member, Anderson is an advocate for maternal health.

But whose skills and background would represent the most valuable addition to City Council? That's up to their neighbors.

District 3: Four East Austinites Challenge José Velásquez for His Seat

He faces a far friendlier race than his fellow incumbents

BY SAMMIE SEAMON

We asked current Austin City Council Member José Velásquez why he's still the best pick to represent East and South Austin's District 3 for another four years.

"Oh, I'd leave that up to the community," he replied. "I'd point to our track record and what we've been able to accomplish together."

But that doesn't mean Velásquez, a fourth-generation East Austin native, doesn't have an argument for why Austinites should reelect him on Nov. 3. "We have made ourselves the most accessible Council office," Velásquez said. "I'm one of the few offices that does one-on-one coffee chats with any constituent that wants to sign up. I do constituent call-back time to make sure that constituents feel seen and heard."

Velásquez also pointed to his efforts to transition city-owned property into affordable housing and his work with Travis County to establish a family justice center. "We hosted the first digital equity fair at City Hall. We have been a champion for small-business owners. We hosted the first small-business resource fair at City Hall," Velásquez continued. He has no political aspirations beyond serving as a Council member, he added.

For an incumbent-challenging City Council election, the District 3 race feels almost friendly. At the Chronicle's endorsement meeting, Velásquez was collegial with the three challengers present who are hoping to replace him: Neha Shah, Brock Skinner, and Gavin Fernandez Jr.

Eduardo "Lalito" Romero is also running for District 3, but did not attend our endorsement meeting and could not be reached for an interview.

Shah told us she moved to the U.S. 10 years ago on a student visa from India, and became a naturalized U.S. citizen and Austin homeowner in 2018. She's also a children's book author and founder of her own tech-related company.

"Just seeing the changes happening on the federal and state level when it comes to immigrant rights … I said, 'You know what? Maybe I'll step up' because I've been in this community. I have a very diverse, expanded network of contacts I've made in Austin from scratch," she told us. "These are doors I knocked on and opened myself."

Skinner was raised in Dallas and moved to Austin 12 years ago, where he works in sales and business development. At forums and in conversations with the Chronicle, public safety in Austin has been a focus for Skinner.

"I am a regular citizen who … has watched our city get exponentially more expensive while also getting exponentially more dangerous," Skinner said at an Oct. 1 forum. "I didn't see that at the forefront of any of the other of my opponents' campaigns, so I threw my name in the hat."

Fernandez is a Democratic Socialist, ex-League of United Latin American Citizens district director, and a longtime East Austin landowner and advocate with the local property owner coalition El Concilio.

"I was born and raised in District 3. I've worked in District 3 all my life, and I would be more accessible to the community," Fernandez told the Chronicle. "I've been an election judge for 18 years. … We initiated the campaign to bring single-member districts. Right now, I'm leading an effort to rename Cesar Chavez [Street] back to First Street."

One issue that separates Velásquez from his challengers is Proposition I, a city charter amendment on the November ballot that would require regular audits of city spending. The city is already undergoing a consultant-run audit of its spending efficiency. The amendment's author group, PAC Save Austin Now, argues that a second "independent" audit of the city is needed, while opponents say it's redundant and could recommend further cuts to city services.

"Prop I is a Republican-led effort that brings the DOGE playbook to Austin. It calls for paying corporate consultants with taxpayer dollars and incentivizes them to find enough cuts to justify their own fee. That puts our social service safety net, essential services, and the workers who keep this city running at risk. I believe in real accountability, but accountability should protect taxpayers and our community, not create a blank check for corporate consultants," Velásquez wrote to the Chronicle.

At the Oct. 1 forum, Romero, Shah, Fernandez, and Skinner all expressed support for Prop I.

"We've been giving a lot of tax breaks to corporate billionaire-type companies. There's also some concerns about affordability and how that's led to certain contracts for the APD that honestly were meant to be salary bumps, so that police could actually live in the community they're in, but that hasn't really panned out the way we hope," Shah said. "I do think we need this audit at this time."

At the forum, Skinner said that the city needs an "independent audit, and we need them regularly. A place where I think money can be found is in our homeless efforts." He also told the Chronicle "that we shouldn't have nearly as much [resources] going to homelessness. … It's [either] you're getting help or you're going to jail."

Fernandez emphasized that unhoused and uninsured Austinites need greater access to mental health services. "We have to convince the private sector, the churches, the neighborhoods to get engaged in the issue of homelessness," Fernandez told us. "At the end of the day, we all are human beings, and we must be treated with respect and dignity."

All of the candidates, including Velásquez, have critiqued the process by which the Dog's Head development project was approved by Council. Back in July, Velásquez was one of three Council members who voted against the creation of a Tax Increment Reinvestment Zone for the Dog's Head area.

In our conversation, Shah emphasized that the District 3 office should do a better job of informing residents about issues, rather than just being reactive to constituent complaints. "I think a lot of folks are just feeling a little out of the loop with what's happening with surveillance tech, what's happening with data centers, what we're doing about Waymos. So many people have complained to me about Waymos," Shah told us.

At our endorsement meeting, Skinner raised simple infrastructure fixes in East Austin as a concrete issue he'd address if elected. "So many sidewalks are overgrown, you can barely walk and see pavement. There's a lot of grass, weeds, trash everywhere," Skinner said. "Making a visible difference would be a great start."

Fernandez is leaning on his decades of advocacy work in East Austin, from leading efforts to close the Holly Power Plant to ending boat races on the lake by Festival Beach back in the Seventies, to his prior experience at the city's Parks and Recreation Department. "Whether I'm elected or not, that's what I'll continue to do anyway," Fernandez said. "People know me."

District 5: Candidates Look to Unseat Ryan Alter

The incumbent and challengers give their pitches for the South Austin district

BY JOE ELLETT

The portion of South Austin that makes up District 5 could see new representation for the next four years, as incumbent Ryan Alter faces three opponents competing to claim the seat. Among the district's residents' largest concerns are the lack of adequate public transportation, the development of affordable housing, and the area's homeless population.

Looking back on his four years as a Council member, Alter said that generating more access to affordable housing, mitigating the cycle of homelessness, and strengthening the city's public safety through the Expanded Mobile Crisis Outreach Team are some of his greatest accomplishments.

"Evidence shows better outcomes for the person in crisis; they don't repeat offend nearly as often, it's cheaper, and it frees up the police. … So it's just win-win-win across the board," Alter told the Chronicle.

And he doesn't deny that he and his fellow Council members fell short in some areas. In hindsight, he said Council "got Prop Q wrong."

"Just from a pure timing perspective as well as being clear with the public, we did not get that right," Alter explained.

The Council member also said the Dog's Head "process was flawed," giving the public minimal time to provide feedback as the dais rushed the vote to secure the deal. "Staff did not do the right amount of public engagement, public communication, and the developer as well," Alter said. "There were a number of colossal faults to go around."

If elected for a second term, Alter said he would prioritize fiscal responsibility, continuing to enhance public safety, generating more affordable housing, and improving the city's parks and recreation system.

"I do think that I've proven myself to be one of the most effective Council members in the past four years. … I have proven myself to be studied, to have taken the time, to get into the details, know the issue, push back on staff when they're going in a direction that is not where we should be going, and I don't think we can afford to trade that away and start over," he said.

One of his three opponents, David Weinberg, thinks that is a trade Austinites should be willing to make. Having previously served as chief of staff for New York state Rep. Linda B. Rosenthal and worked with multiple organizations focused on protecting the environment, he now owns a political consulting firm. Weinberg told the Chronicle a combination of being "deeply disappointed" in how the district has been represented over the last four years and growing support from others led him to throw his name in the hat to represent District 5 the next four years. "I felt the incumbent was doing a very, very poor job representing the district," he said.

Weinberg said he is not the only D5 constituent to express that sentiment. Specifically looking at the sensitive homelessness issue within the district, he said that residents he has spoken to feel like Alter could be doing a more thorough job at engaging with the community's concerns. "I talk to people who live around Sunrise [Homeless Navigation Center], and it's kind of like … we don't feel like Ryan has really been kind of present for most of that," he said. "I want to be somebody who's present in the community."

The candidate also takes issue with a handful of decisions Alter made that could potentially negatively affect the area's green spaces – voting in favor of the now-shelved 2023 Zilker Park Vision Plan, which Weinberg rallied against, and more recently, gas-powered peaker plants and the unpopular Dog's Head agreement. "Ryan is voting with big special interest groups that give a lot of money to Council members, and I would vote differently on all that stuff," Weinberg said.

> "I felt the incumbent was doing a very, very poor job representing the district."
> DAVID WEINBERG

Liz Brink is the blue-collar nominee for the South Austin district. The union electrician and first-time candidate for public office decided to run for Council because she was "tired of bitching" about decisions the city has been making. "What is City Council thinking? Like, are they not listening to what people are saying? It just really felt like the citizens just aren't being heard," she told the Chronicle.

Similar to Weinberg, the Dog's Head agreement rubbed Brink the wrong way. "I don't think that Austin should get sold out for the sake of development," she said. "That was a really dirty way of going about it." However, as far as general data center development goes – which Council is currently in the process of regulating – Brink believes there are economic opportunities the city could capitalize on. "I'm not against the building of data centers," she said. "I don't have a problem if the city wants to have certain restrictions, but I wouldn't have a ban on it."

Through conversations with District 5 residents, Brink said that the homeless population and housing development remain the largest concerns for her neighbors. She specifically looked to 6200 Menchaca, where the city plans to build a multi-story affordable housing apartment complex. She said the existing residents in the area have been overlooked.

"The goal is just to cram as many people as you can, instead of being thoughtful about it," Brink said. "Maybe you can reduce the units, and maybe instead of just being only renters, we can have some ownership opportunities. … You have to be mindful of the community."

For Farrah Abraham, the fourth – and most unexpected – candidate on the ticket, data center regulation isn't a large concern; she stated that the rise of artificial intelligence is a "made-up crisis." Abraham, who gained fame in her youth as a cast member in MTV's 16 & Pregnant and Teen Mom and has since appeared in other reality television shows, wants to "stand with everybody" to strengthen the district.

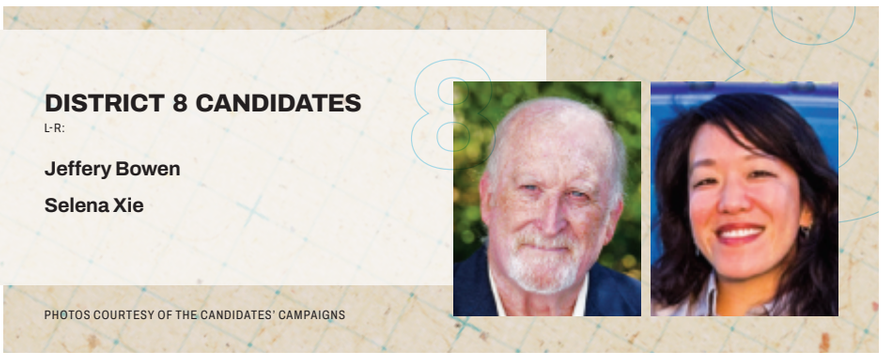

As for her primary concerns, Abraham pointed to the basic necessities. "My top priority is making sure that everybody has food, water, shelter. … If people are saying that they do not have these common essential needs met, that is definitely a top priority. That is killing Austinites. So if anyone is feeling like they're gonna die, I'm gonna make sure they're gonna live."

The self-described "teen mom on a budget" said that city spending remains an issue that she would address. "If you put me in a position of, like you're saying, budgets, get this stretched out, do an audit, make sure that these funds are lasting or better allocated, or whatever the case may be, I am there looking at all the variables," Abraham said. "And also, if you need more money somewhere, I'm the girl to fundraise and get you more money for anything."

District 8: First Responder and City Scrutinizer Compete for the Seat

Selena Xie and Jeffery Bowen vie to represent Southwest Austin

BY BRANT BINGAMON

If you subscribe to the notion that police, fire, and EMS workers are heroes, then there's a hero running for City Council this year. And if you think that members of the U.S. Armed Forces are also heroes, then we've got two running. Selena Xie, a commander with Austin-Travis County EMS, and Jeffery Bowen, a veteran and local fiscal hawk, are hoping to replace Paige Ellis as the representative of Southwest Austin's District 8.

Xie has served with EMS since 2012 and has also been an ICU nurse for nearly a decade. She was one of the first responders who rushed to the mass shooting at Buford's Backyard Beer Garden on March 1, a tragedy that resulted in the deaths of four people. She said that paramedics got to the scene less than a minute after being dispatched, thanks in part to a new rescue training task force she helped implement that allows EMS to begin treating patients before the crime scene has been cleared by police. "I can tell you, a lot more people would have died if we didn't have that rescue task force," Xie said.

The candidate told us that her six years as the president of the EMS union got her interested in city politics and gave her a firm understanding of public safety issues, housing, and budgeting. She pointed out that public safety makes up about 65% of the city's General Fund budget, and yet there are no public safety experts on Council. She said she wants to make D8 more affordable, safe, and resilient, especially in terms of the threat of wildfires and a dwindling water supply. Housing affordability is a priority, and she pledged, if elected, to closely monitor the implementation of the HOME initiatives. She also supports the city's new rolling audit program but not the separate Proposition I audit plan that Save Austin Now got on the November ballot through a citizen petition.

Xie's opponent, Jeffery Bowen, spent 20 years in the Air Force, primarily as a construction manager. He is a 37-year resident of D8 and continues to work in construction, while also serving as the chair of the city's Board of Adjustment and president of Austin Neighborhoods Council.

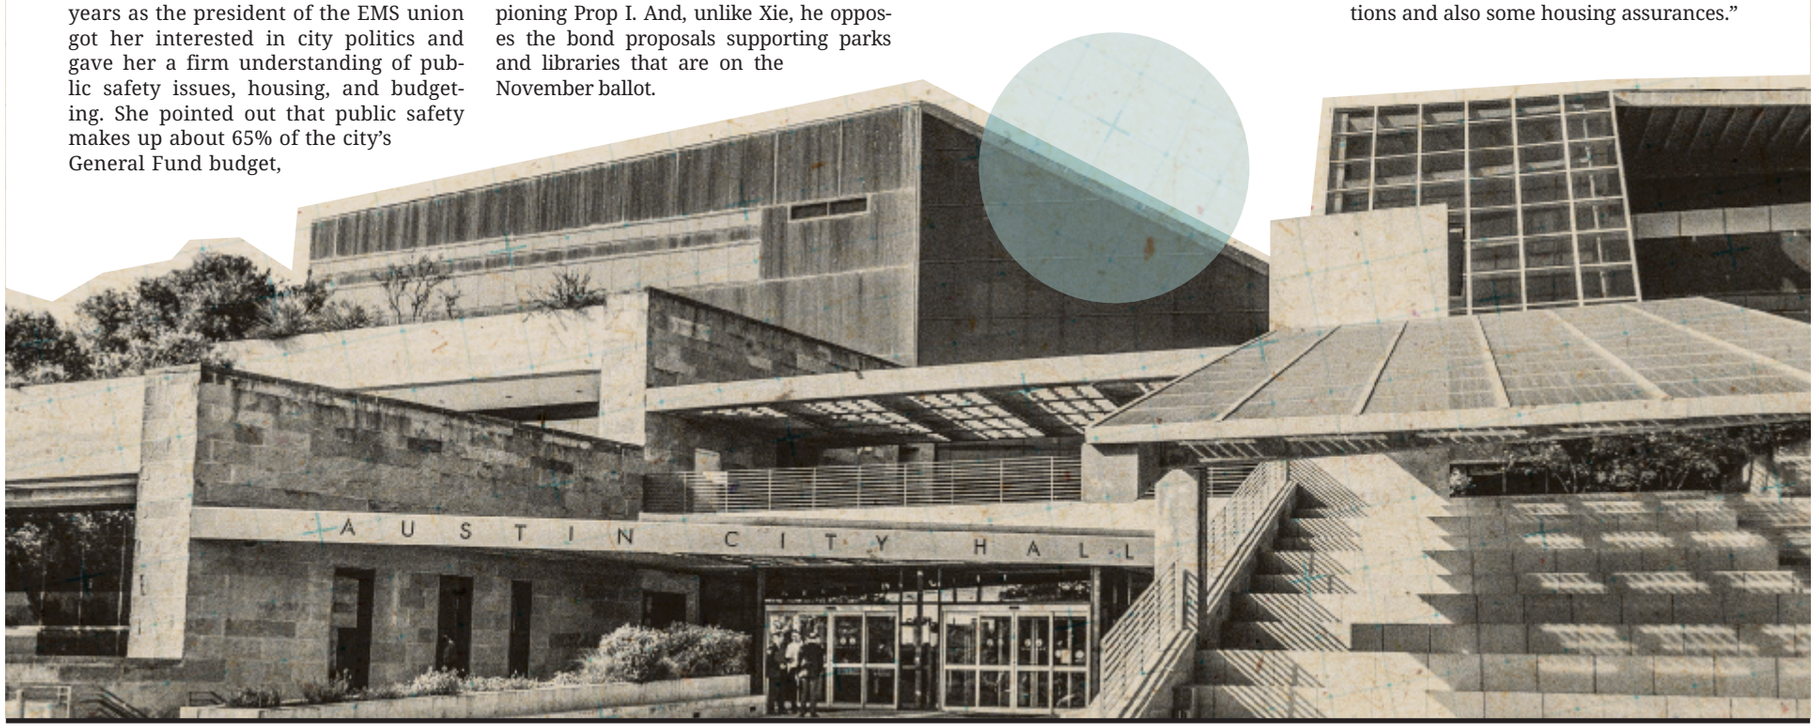

Bowen is a frequent commenter at City Council meetings, urging the city's elected leaders to lower taxes and prioritize efficiency. He was an early opponent of Proposition Q, the proposal to increase property taxes that crashed and burned at the election last fall. This year, he is championing Prop I. And, unlike Xie, he opposes the bond proposals supporting parks and libraries that are on the November ballot.

"I can't support it," Bowen said, speaking of the parks bond in particular. "Because I have no way of knowing whether or not they're going to be able to spend that money wisely … because they haven't proven to me that they're capable of managing the system as it is."

Bowen said he also wants to fill the open positions at APD, Fire, and EMS. He wants to ensure that the city's efforts to reduce homelessness yield measurable results. He does not believe that HOME is working. He wants to make it easier for homeowners to construct ADUs on their properties. And he was against Council's votes to push forward the controversial Dog's Head development east of Downtown.

"They've been working on this for seven years," Bowen said of the developers and city staff involved in the deal, "and now the city just magically comes up and goes, 'Oh, this is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.' You cannot tell me that you were working in a vacuum on this. There were too many issues in this entire process, too many questions that nobody was willing to answer. Let me just say: There's more questions than there's answers."

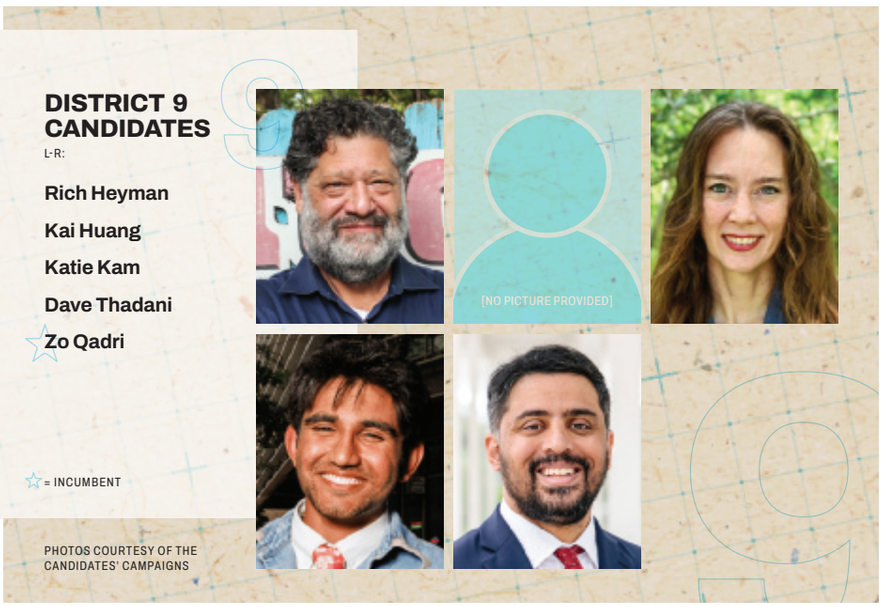

Xie said she was also against Council's votes on Dog's Head. "I think that it was terrible," Xie said. "And we know that the developers really wanted to be included in the city, so there should have been a better deal that was struck. Any deal should have had much stronger environmental protections and also some housing assurances."

District 9: Zo Qadri Draws Several Challengers

The central district is up for grabs with candidates questioning the incumbent's voting record on the dais

BY BRANT BINGAMON

You could argue that Zo Qadri is the most prominent urbanist on City Council. Part of that is due to the district he represents. District 9 is the most urban of the city's 10 districts, covering the majority of Downtown, many of the city's oldest neighborhoods, and the headquarters of the Chronicle. It includes the future convention center and what will be the heart of the Project Connect light rail line, once it's built.

In a recent endorsement meeting, Qadri reminded us that he ran in 2022 on a platform of increasing housing affordability, investing in mobility, and helping our homeless community. He said these issues are still top of mind.

"We've seen rent go down in the city, but we still see evictions, unfortunately, at a high level," Qadri said. "We've seen investments in mobility, but we still often see many folks, especially on the Eastside, being left behind. And then we've seen homelessness go to a five-year low, but we still have about 4,000 to 5,000 unhoused folks in the city. So with all the good that's happened, there's still a lot of work to be done."

Qadri said his proudest accomplishment on Council thus far has been his work to eliminate "parking minimums," city rules requiring new developments to include spaces for parking. Urbanists support abolishing these rules as a way to decrease housing costs and discourage car culture. "We became the largest city in the country to do that," Qadri said. "A parking spot costs anywhere from $5,000 to $50,000, and that cost often falls on the renter or the homeowner."

The incumbent also strongly supported the accompanying urbanist measures passed by Council in recent years and said he believes some of the housing decisions the dais made over the last four years are "one piece of the puzzle" that will lower housing costs.

Rich Heyman disagrees. Heyman is a neighborhood organizer who has taught urban studies, geography, American studies, and community and regional planning at a variety of universities for three decades. He taught at UT for 18 years before being fired for participating in the 2024 pro-Palestinian demonstrations. Heyman argues that the urbanist reforms are doing nothing to drive down housing costs and have actually increased the risk of displacement. He told us he decided to enter the D9 race after Council's controversial decision over the Acacia Cliffs development in West Austin last year.

Acacia Cliffs is an apartment complex off Far West Boulevard that provides what is called naturally occurring affordable housing. It offers 290 one- and two-bedroom units averaging around $1,000 per month – affordable to renters at about 30-40% of the median family income. The complex is also within walking distance of a grocery store, doctor's offices, and public schools.

However, Council agreed last June to the owner's request to rezone Acacia Cliffs under the city's DB90 density bonus program. That will allow it to be replaced with a seven-story, 700-unit development, with 80 units set aside for people making 50-60% MFI. Supporters of the deal argue that the owner was going to redevelop the property with or without Council's zoning approval. Critics said the vote helped to replace 290 units of affordable housing with 80 less-affordable units.

"That was such a shocking miscarriage of justice," Heyman said. "There were a lot of veterans and disabled folks and workers in the service industry in that neighborhood that were put out of their homes. And the argument was that there'll be more units in the future, and by some logic of the market that will make things more affordable. But meanwhile, these people were put out of their homes."

Heyman argues that the recent reductions in housing prices in Austin are the result of macroeconomic forces – a building surge that began in 2015, reduced in-migration, and tech layoffs – and have nothing to do with Council's urbanist reforms. He said Austin's high cost of housing is partly the result of its leaders' economic policies, which have prioritized bringing tech companies to town. On his website, he presents data showing that the percentage of Austinites making a "high income," meaning $105,000 or more a year in 2024, has increased from 12% in 2001 to 16.5% in 2024. But the percentage of those making a "low income," meaning $42,000 or less a year in 2024, has also increased, while the number of people making middle incomes has declined, according to Heyman's findings.

"Our policies need to support the working people of Austin, not cater to the wealthy with some vague theory that that kind of economic development will trickle down," Heyman said. "We need new policies that rethink economic development from the bottom up, that support local businesses who pay their employees well, give them benefits, paid sick leave, and predictable schedules."

With this economic critique, it's unsurprising that Heyman is a strong critic of the Dog's Head development, which, as it currently stands, will provide over a billion dollars of public taxpayer support for a development including an Amazon robotics factory. On the campaign trail, Heyman emphasizes that Qadri voted for the Dog's Head development deal when it was first presented to Council in May. However, in July, Qadri was one of three Council members who voted against sending taxpayer money to the Dog's Head's developers.

Katie Kam, a civil engineer and former AISD teacher who has lived in Austin since 1983, also opposes the Dog's Head deal. She said Council made a mistake when they bypassed the usual development process and hurriedly approved Dog's Head. "They don't have to throw something on the agenda, completely avoid boards and commissions and public feedback," Kam said. "That is a massive amount of land near an environmentally sensitive area. That was worth much more public engagement and board and commission review before it went to Council. If I was on that City Council, I'd be like, 'Nope, you're going to go through the process.'"

Kam would also like Council to abandon Project Connect and improve transit through the construction of a monorail and the use of small electric vehicles in dedicated driving lanes, especially Downtown. She criticizes Council's decision to rebuild the convention center, saying she'd like to cancel the project, sell off two of the six Downtown blocks it is to be built upon, and instead construct a cultural venue showcasing the history of Austin's creative culture – its music, literature, film, and visual arts.

"There are cities that are desperate to have what Austin has, which is this natural gravitational pull of creatives coming into the city," Kam said. "And we're just not supporting it. We have the talent that came here before us, in the 1950s for writing, in the Sixties and Seventies for music, and it just continued from there. We need to honor that and we need to build upon that, because that's a gift to Austin."

Dave Thadani and Kai Huang are also running to represent D9. We were unable to speak with the candidates after repeated attempts. ■

FRIDAY 9, RUIZ BRANCH LIBRARY

Who says libraries can't be spooky? Austin Public Library's Ruiz branch is turning into a Halloween playground for grownups. Horror fans can test their movie knowledge with trivia, create creepy crafts, and join a short story workshop led by local author and screenwriter C. Robert Cargill, whose credits include The Black Phone and Sinister. From plush bats to pumpkin mosaics, there's plenty to keep your hands busy while your imagination runs wild at this free, adults-only event. – ERIKA GONZALEZ

Entre Dos Cielos (Between Two Skies) THEATRE

FRIDAY 9 - SUNDAY 11, GERRY OHLENDORF PERFORMING ARTS CENTER

It is a truth universally acknowledged that every "weird" city must have thriving circus arts. We're lucky enough to have a few here in Austin, including the incomparable Cirque Vida. They keep their fiercely exploratory performances dedicated to enriching our local space and proving that "circus is for everyone." Latest work Entre Dos Cielos was initially developed through a Centro Cultural Teopanzolco residency in Cuernavaca, Mexico. But Cirque Vida's local (Lockhart counts, it's worth the drive!) presentation widens that net, bringing in original music by DEADMAN, performances by Lockhart High School's Mariachi Program, and mesmerizing circus skills. – CAT MCCARREY

We Come to This Place for the Magic: An October Ode to Nicole Kidman

FILM

FRIDAYS THROUGH OCTOBER 30, BARRETT'S TOO

One of our favorite Australians is enjoying a cultural power increase, thanks in part to former ballerina and current Slovak pop-star Adéla's ballad to her beauty aptly titled "Nicole Kidman." But the actress earned top tier Mother status ages ago through her performance as the ideal moviegoer in AMC's pre-show as well as through her many, MANY iconic performances. See a sterling selection programed each Friday in October over at Barrett's Too: her macabre maternal instincts in Park Chan-wook's Stoker (10/9) and Alejandro Amenábar's The Others (10/23), her best proto-Erika Kirk impression in Gus Van Sant's To Die For (10/16), and her turn as the sultry & spellbinding sister in Griffin Dunne's adaptation of Alice Hoffman's Practical Magic (10/30). You don't even have to be an A-List member to enjoy this magic; each screening is free. – JAMES SCOTT

"INVASIVE SPECIES 2" GROWS BIGGER IN SCOPE AND SCALE

It's in the air, the water, and now it's in our local art galleries & microcinemas! Yes, that's right: Curated by Alexis Hunter, this October bears out "Invasive Species 2," a multi-day and -disciplinary series where women artists invade male-dominated art biomes including the fine arts, film, and literature – changing their environment to one more hospitable to the feminine spirit.

The invasion was first propagated in Hunter's Haven't I Given Enough painting series, a response to the 2022 overturning of landmark legal case Roe v. Wade. "That body of work came directly out of my fear and rage around the loss of my bodily autonomy," Hunter recalls of the series, which featured the artist as towering kaijus like Godzilla "destroying a city of man." Alongside co-curator Jacqueline Overby and 14 other women artists, Hunter made that expression of destruction wider-reaching through the original June 2023 group exhibition at ICOSA Gallery.

"Invasive Species 2"
Oct. 9-31, the Future Front House and Hyperreal Film Club
instagram.com/invasive_species_atx

"I really love the conceptual theming of invasive species," says Hunter. "I like to think of it as we, as women, are invading these male-dominated ecosystems and environments, encroaching on their territory and pushing them out and taking over, just in the same way like kudzu vine." Thus, much the same as the quick-growing vine that's taken over trees, telephone poles, and houses across the South, "Invasive Species 2" this year expands beyond a single venue. Hunter credits this wider reach to applying for and getting awarded an Elevate grant through the Austin Arts, Culture, Music, and Entertainment Department, "which has enabled me to grow this project and imagine these vines and tendrils reaching out and infecting community partners and the influence spreading."

Speaking of the infection spreading, this year's schedule welcomes two new collaborators in Hyperreal Film Club and Host Publications. Over at HFC will be a weeklong feminist horror block – Oct. 12-16 – programmed by Austin School of Film's Faiza Kracheni and Museum of Human Achievement's Cynthia Muñoz, with screenings including creepy classics and cool shorts showcases. On Oct. 17, back at Future Front House, local women-led lit slingers Host Publications introduce an authorial element into the invasion via a panel discussion moderated by Annar Veröld with local pens Jasmine Games, Julie Poole, and Katy Horan offering their thoughts and readings. Both additional events make for "great opportunities to keep this, like, spider web growing," Hunter adds.

Just as in 2023, though, everything starts with a group art exhibition. Opening Friday, Oct. 9, will be a showcase of nine women's work at 12th and Chicon culture hub the Future Front House, which will remain on display through the 31st. This time, however, the invasion of the hegemonic ecosystem has become more intersectional, with works exploring the queer, disabled, Black, and immigrant woman experience.

Hunter herself has a piece in the show much different than her previous creature-based creations. "My work since the first 'Invasive Species' is about transformation, loving yourself, healing, and being on the other side in this post-Roe v. Wade overturned world," she says. Her painting, The Great Softening, is of herself flying through the sky and holding hands with her own reflection. The painting's parenthetical summarizes this second go-around of the exhibition: (You must love yourself into evolution).

"That's kind of like the vibe of this 'Invasive Species' [version]," Hunter says. "Like less of a place of rage and more of a place like 'Let's get out of this bitch together.'" – JAMES SCOTT

GERALD E. McLEOD

Casa Rio in San Antonio reached its 80th anniversary on Oct. 4. That's quite a feat for the oldest restaurant on the River Walk.

The story of the iconic Tex-Mex restaurant began in 1921 when the San Antonio River flooded downtown, killing about 50 people. Residents called for a dam upstream (Olmos Dam), and channelizing and paving over the river.

Enter Robert H.H. Hugman, a 27-year-old UT-trained engineer who in 1929 had the vision of turning the river into a linear park with sidewalks, bridges, and Venetian-style gondolas. By 1946, much of his dream, the River Walk that millions enjoy, had become a reality.

At the Commerce Street Bridge, Alfred F. Beyer, a German appliance store owner, cleaned out the basement of a building constructed in the 1770s and opened the first restaurant facing the river. Over time Beyer added recreational watercraft, a fleet of dinner barges, and the restaurant's signature colorful umbrellas to accommodate riverside dining.

Over four generations the restaurant has remained in the same family. Beyer's grandson Bill Lyons and great-granddaughter Elizabeth Lyons Houston run it today.

The menu has grown over the years, offering a mix of Tex-Mex inspired dishes and cold margaritas for an authentic San Antonio meal.

One item that has remained on the menu is the original "Regular Plate" consisting of a cheese enchilada, a tamale, chili con carne, refried beans, and Spanish rice. For the restaurant's 80th anniversary, the original recipes were restored after being tweaked by a succession of cooks. One thing they couldn't bring back permanently was the price – 70 cents in 1946 – but they offered it for one day.

Casa Rio is open daily at 430 E. Commerce St. in downtown San Antonio. It's next door to Schilo's Delicatessen, the oldest continuously operated restaurant in San Antonio (since 1917), owned by the Lyons family since 1980. Next year Casa Rio plans to add a rooftop bar.

Vaudeville Night: Celebrating Grownfolk Blues

BOOKS QUEER

FRIDAY 9, ALIENATED MAJESTY BOOKS

How to celebrate a cross-genre poetry collection about a queer Black woman named You whose story is inspired by the Southern blues artists of the Twenties and Thirties? Why, by throwing a ding-dang evening soiree replete with music, refreshments, and "poetic ecstasy"! Host Publications' own Annar Veröld-Miranda and Claire Bowman lead this celebration of Grownfolk Blues: a musical in poems' release, which includes performances and readings by Jae Nichelle, Amanda Johnston, Shy-Zahir Moses, Bianca on Sax, and DéShawn Mckeel. If you've never been to Alienated Majesty – which just celebrated its three-year anniversary last weekend – consider carpooling, as parking spots are not in surplus. – JAMES SCOTT

Rodrigo y Gabriela

MUSIC

FRIDAY 9, EMO'S

Mexico City acoustic acrobats Rodrigo Sánchez and Gabriela Quintero brought down the Tito's Tent in Zilker Park last weekend. Imagine four hands, 12 strings, and no vocals pulling focus on an overflow local shed hanging on every strum, fingerpicking, and percussive wallop and bang on said axes. Better still, backstage in the media area of ACL Fest, Waterloo Records gratefully returned this year with artist signings, Rodrigo y Gabriela's new album OurHome taking the top slot. In an oasis for Latin instrumentalism – ours – the new platter blazes gripping virtuosity, a powerful emotional narrative, and game-changer vocals. Released last month, consider it already a Best of 2026. Perfect venue too for R&G's flamenco transcendence. – RAOUL HERNANDEZ

Yes, this sounds pretty much correct. Made up of members of such esteemed outfits as ...Trail of Dead and A Giant Dog, Tear Dungeon's gimp-masked, blood-spitting chaos is a thrill to witness live, and their new album, Squirm, is probably Austin's heavy record of the year, a disgusting miasma of sludge-garage that works well with song titles such as "Charlie Kirk's Neckhole Fleshlight." Wallow in it. With Banged Out, Gus Baldwin & the Sketch, and Throat Piss. – JOE GROSS

BOOKS

SATURDAY 10, AUSTIN BOOKS & COMICS

Full disclosure: I have met the author of this new comics collection, which traverses the nuances of nature – what if monkeys stole a banana truck – to the absurdities of outer space – what if an alien landed on Earth to get a barbershop fade – all to humorous effect. He tabled at this year's indie art expo Staple!, where I bought a print and stickers off him. After, of course, dropping my day job as Chron Calendar editor into our chat, he asked if he could get my work email to alert me about this very event. Usually I carry a notebook – or my fabulous business cards – for such an ask, but I simply didn't have either this time. So, instead, I wrote my email addy on the back of a zine I made about Garfield. Time passed, and while I didn't get an email from dear Fishman about this signing, I'm still letting YOU know he's in town, he's signing books, and there'll be a Q&A hosted at ABC this weekend. – JAMES SCOTT

COMMUNITY CIVICS

SATURDAY 10, DOWNTOWN MARTINDALE

Citizens in Caldwell and Hays counties have driven surveillance cameras out of their communities recently and that's in no small part due to organizers like the Caldwell/Hays Examiner, which provides oversight of their local governments. On Sept. 10, Caldwell County rejected a $100,000 grant from Texas' Operation Lone Star program, citing concerns about the money's possible use for surveillance. Five days later, the Hays County Commissioners Court voted to strip funding for a $4.5 million contract expansion with tech company Axon that would have boosted artificial intelligence in the county's law enforcement systems. On Saturday, 17 local groups gather to strategize next steps. – BRANT BINGAMON

You'll see booths ranging from The Rag to Austin History Center and be able to meet with creators and even walk away with your very own zine. The festival is free to attend and organized by Austin Zine Friends, a local nonprofit supporting zine artists. [Editor's note: As much as brevity is the soul of wit, I must add to this short event description that this year's zine fest theme is Eighties Prom. Jane's Due Process 25th Anniversary Gala COMMUNITY

SATURDAY 10, THE OASIS ON LAKE TRAVIS

As major fundraisers, gala events tend to be prohibitively expensive, but this one we're recommending for a few reasons – including the more manageable $75 ticket tier for folks 25 and under. Nonprofit Jane's Due Process has been an essential part of Texas' reproductive care landscape, connecting young people to abortion care, birth control, education, and support for a quarter-century. This anniversary celebration event, emceed by Austin drag royalty Alexander the Great and honoring Council Member Vanessa Fuentes for her work supporting reproductive and human rights, also boasts a mystery guest of sorts: the unveiling of Jane's Due Process' new name, one they say will better reflect JDP's evolution into "a full-spectrum reproductive and sexual healthcare support organization for young Texans." – KIMBERLEY JONES

The Thing FILM

SATURDAY 10 - SUNDAY 11, FLIX BREWHOUSE

If you're bummed about an 85-degree Halloween forecast, this horror chiller can double as some winter wish fulfillment. Set in a remote Antarctic camp, a group of scientists are beset by a shapeshifting alien that causes violent tendencies in its chosen host. As the thing hops from body to body, friends are turned against each other, forced to guess who is really themselves and who isn't before it's too late. One of the best horror scores ever by spaghetti Western maestro Ennio Morricone adds to the suffocating atmosphere of icy paranoia. – LINA FISHER

SATURDAY 10 - SUNDAY 11 AND TUESDAY 13, GALAXY HIGHLAND 10

It's hard to believe the great Ms. Parton is really gone, but the best way to honor her is to revel in the vast well of art she left behind. Beyond music, she brought her effervescent charm to the big screen in this comic folie à trois – Parton, Fonda & Tomlin – that follows three secretaries getting increasingly wacky levels of revenge on their sexist boss. Fun fact: Jane Fonda's real-life activism was the inspiration for the film, which shares its name with 9to5, National Association of Working Women, which Fonda's friend Karen Nussbaum founded. – LINA FISHER

Cryogeyser MUSIC

SATURDAY 10, 29TH STREET BALLROOM

Cryogeyser's 2025 self-titled album opens with "Sorry," which frontperson Shawn Marom cinematically described to Flood Magazine as "the song that plays at the pool party your ex is at." Laced with longing, the band's wistful ballads hearken to vintage fuzz-pop icons like Mazzy Star, layering big, sometimes-grungy electric guitar strums with dreamy melodies. Some of it is loud, some of it is soft, but it's all deliciously Nineties-inspired, with tracks like "Fortress" and "Blew It" eligible for movie soundtrack status. If you're in the mood to discover your new favorite guitar rock act, this Cryogeyser show is just the place. – KATIE HAYES

Elizabeth Hudson: "Maze Tales" Opening Reception VISUAL ARTS

SUNDAY 11, AUSTIN CENTRAL LIBRARY

A maze often represents strife in a story – the frightening frozen hedges of The Shining or the dark beast-stalked underground of the Minotaur myth – but what if those labyrinthine halls weren't a nightmare but a dream? Watercolor artist Elizabeth Hudson pulls from Black folklore in her new exhibition, which opened at the start of October, and melds "the natural world with both the imagined and the constructed worlds of staircases, pathways, and playgrounds." In this in-between, she expounds on the maze as a journey one takes willingly: a way to explore one's dreams hidden from outside obstruction. This opening reception includes a meet & greet and watercolor tutorial with Hudson, but her pieces will be available for viewing through 'til Jan. 3, 2027. – JAMES SCOTT

Lisa Woods: "Every Body a Water Body, Every Field a Clock" VISUAL ARTS

THROUGH NOVEMBER 22, WOMEN & THEIR WORK

Look down from above the Great Plains and giant circles appear across the fields. Those enormous patterns across farmland support between one-fifth and one-third of America's agriculture. In "Every Body a Water Body, Every Field a Clock," Lisa Woods follows the water of the Ogallala Aquifer through agriculture, technology, and human bodies. Her kinetic sculpture, ceramics, and video turn irrigation machinery and groundwater into something strange and animate, asking us to see water not simply as a resource, but as something we live with, depend on, and carry within us. – MARYAM MULIAEE

What's the Story, Wishbone? FILM

SUNDAY 11, AFS CINEMA

Way back in the mid-Nineties, a scrappy little TV show called Wishbone hit the PBS airwaves, teaching kids about classic literature through the eyes of an expressive Jack Russell terrier named Soccer. From the same company that produced the massively popular Barney & Friends, Wishbone ran from 1995 to 1997 and hinged on the premise of its canine star imagining himself inside the pages of Cyrano de Bergerac, Great Expectations, and of course The Hound of the Baskervilles. Get a behind-the-scenes look at all the work that went into this multiple-Emmy-winning program that was designed for kids but delighted adults, with this screening including a Q&A with documentarian Joey Stewart and producers Betty Buckley and Larry Brantley, who was also the voice of Wishbone. – KAT MCNEVINS

MONDAY 12, BOOKWOMAN

As Kwaneta Harris wrote on these very pages during her eighth year of solitary confinement in a Texas prison, "Society would be appalled, but we're never invited to participate in discussions concerning us." A former nurse and business owner, currently incarcerated journalist Harris has been prolific in her work shining a light on how "being incarcerated is vastly different for women in ways that directly map onto a culture rooted in misogyny." Tenured CUNY Law professor Deborah Zalesne has been volunteering editing expertise to imprisoned writers since 2022 and has co-authored a book with Harris, Christopher Blackwell, and Dr. Terry Kupers, and will be on hand for a Q&A about it with Harris joining virtually. QMMUNITY

BY JAMES SCOTT

Wow, wow, wow: October's already well underway. Have you decided on your Halloween costume yet? Me, I'm not a costume person. Something about the work involved wards me away, especially given how poorly I take to fabric crafts. But that wasn't always the case, to be honest. I used to be obsessed with dressing up for Halloween all throughout my tweendom into collegiate young adulthood. Though I wore my fair share of princess and fairy attire, the standout guises were always masculine fantasies realized. Captain Jack Sparrow, with the faux eyes painted on my lids by my mom; Captain James T. Kirk, with online-purchased Starfleet uniforms for me and the friends I wrangled into being my Bones and Spock; and Edgar Allan Poe, though this one I remember being a hassle because of a difficult wig.

There's lots of reasons people love costumes, but for me, Halloween was a chance to act on my often repressed desire to wear men's clothing. It sounds cliche when I think about it, but god: I wanted to wear that shit so bad. Now I realize the option was always open to me. How hard could walking over to the JCPenney's men's section be? Yet I remember how many walls I put up within my own mind against such freedom. "That might be okay for some people," I would think, "but if you do it, you're a fool."

What broke past the boundaries? Finding other people whose entire vibe matched my own, aka the gay trans men fans of Jeffrey Combs in Re-Animator. Heaven itself opened and serenaded me via my Tumblr dashboard: You can be gay and trans, the angels sang. I came out first to myself, putting a name to a feeling I'd had my whole life. After that, my costume cravings slowly went away. Even when a character caught my eye with a fun look or cool attitude, I had no interest in replicating their outfit one-to-one. Instead, I integrated their style into my wardrobe rebuild. I no longer needed to be someone else to access sartorial joy; now, I could just be myself 24/7, 365.

Why bring this up? Well, what had the most impact on me coming out was other people living and loving their truth. This National Coming Out Day, I encourage everyone to live their lives as honestly as possible – whether you're rocking a cool costume or wearing your everyday clothes to hand out candy. You never know who you're setting free by just being happily and wholly yourself. ■

THE VERDE REPORT

BY ERIC GOODMAN

Davy Arnaud (center) faces his toughest assignment yet as Austin FC interim head coach with three consecutive matches against top opponents COURTESY OF AUSTIN FC

Hellish Week Stands Between Austin FC and Playoff Doom

It's October, and Austin FC is still very much alive in the MLS Playoffs race. That would have seemed nearly impossible just two months ago, after the club endured a miserable stretch of games across both sides of the World Cup break, losing six out of seven MLS contests and looking about as vivacious as Zilker Park post-ACL Fest.

Since August 19, though, the Verde and Black have clung to life with eight straight matches sans defeat. That said, only three of those eight results have been victories, to go along with five draws. And even that rate of performance likely won't be enough to overcome the club's early-season struggles and land a top-nine spot in a jumbled Western Conference table.

As we've discussed before, making the playoffs this season is far from the be-all, end-all for Austin FC from a big-picture standpoint, but it still remains the sole focus of interim coach Davy Arnaud and Verde players. So, for the time being, it remains our focus as well. And if playoffs are to become a reality for Austin FC, Arnaud and his squad are going to have to find a way to navigate the most treacherous stretch of the season so far.

From this Saturday (Oct. 10) to the following Saturday (Oct. 17) ATXFC takes on three of the toughest tests MLS can throw at it. First up is a home clash against the team that has dominated the league all season, Nashville SC. Led by its star trio of Sam Surridge, Hany Mukhtar, and Cristian Espinoza, Nashville's 60 points on the season are 10 more than the next closest club, the Vancouver Whitecaps.

"Nashville is very good, and we understand that. Listen, there is not an easy game in this league," Arnaud said.

To illustrate his point, the Verde and Black then head out west for a Wednesday night battle against LAFC, before returning home three nights later to face the aforementioned Whitecaps.

It's a brutal stretch, but there is some cause for optimism from Austin's perspective. The club has played teams in the upper echelon of MLS impressively well, relative to what its season record might suggest. Against teams in the top-seven of either conference (above the play-in line) Austin is a perfectly even 5W-5D-5L, which includes a prior win against Vancouver and a draw against LAFC.

"We say the most important thing is for us to be tough to beat," Arnaud said. "I think you've seen these guys, they're up for any challenge. I think they've shown that."

With the Verde and Black currently sitting 13th in the Western Conference table and five points outside the playoff picture, it's hard to see anything less than one win and one draw being enough to keep the Verde playoff hopes afloat for another week.

INTERNATIONAL START FOR ERVIN TORRES

Immediately following Austin FC's latest match on Sept. 26, 18-year-old ATX midfielder Ervin Torres boarded a flight to Spain to link up with the United States U-20 Men's National Team for the first time. Torres made the starting lineup in a friendly against Denmark, which resulted in a 3-3 draw.

Torres has now represented the United States at four youth national team levels and continues a steady rise that has made him a player to watch for both club and country.

Horse Jumper of Love MUSIC

WEDNESDAY 14, ANTONE'S

Two now-classic indie rock gems bookend Horse Jumper of Love's eponymous debut album. Twinges of melancholy guitar, quietly pensive at first and resounding later, cry throughout too-brief opener "Ugly Brunette"; "Orange Peeler" stretches out with bittersweet atmospherics and an experimental noise outro. The recently reissued LP, 10 next year, placed the Boston trio on the ground floor of that fruitful realm where slowcore meets shoegaze, which has only expanded in the last decade. 2024 effort Disaster Trick and May TAGABOW collaboration "charter spec" stamp on the distortion, upping the band's weight without losing their warmth. Dead Sullivan and Amelia's Best Friend open. – CARYS ANDERSON

Esperanza THEATRE

THURSDAY 15 - SATURDAY 24, TRINITY STREET PLAYHOUSE

What does hope look like when everything you know is left behind? Written and directed by Rupert Reyes, Esperanza explores the experiences of immigrant families navigating separation, sacrifice, and the search for a better future. The play, inspired by the impact of U.S. immigration enforcement policies, brings deeply personal stories to the stage. Nonprofit theatre company Trinity Street Players presents the production, which invites audiences to look beyond headlines and consider the human experiences behind immigration. – ERIKA GONZALEZ

Bright Eyes MUSIC

THURSDAY 15, STUBB'S

If you've cut your hair to hide your sullen face, carved depressive poetry into a park bench, or given a poorly received political speech at the Thanksgiving table, you've likely also scream-cried along to Bright Eyes' shamelessly cathartic songwriting. Growing up has sharpened Conor Oberst's pen, but hardly dulled his impassioned performances, oscillating between oppressive sadness and righteous rage – though lately, he says, he's got his drinking under control. Bringing some fellow Nebraskans, Nineties chamber-folk act Lullaby for the Working Class, out of a long hibernation, the emo trio (and friends) offer a scintillating opportunity to be heartbroken and furious in community. – CAROLINE DREW

Writers' League of Texas Third Thursday BOOKS

THURSDAY 15, BOOKPEOPLE

The Writers' League of Texas presents accomplished true crime authors and journalists to discuss the ins and outs of writing compelling, ethical, and accurate true crime fiction. The speakers include Texas Monthly editor-at-large Bryan Burrough, Marshall Project journalist Maurice Chammah, and award-winning Austin author Beverly Lowry, with WLT program director Sarah Renee Beach moderating the panel. After the discussion, there will be a booksigning. – CHARLIE SHARPE

Modest Mouse MUSIC

THURSDAY 15, ACL LIVE AT THE MOODY THEATER

If your anxiety and rage need a more kinetic outlet than Bright Eyes across town, Modest Mouse has you covered. The new album from the Northwest indie rock stalwarts, this year's An Eraser and a Maze, marks their first independent release in almost three decades, and the first album since the passing of founding drummer Jeremiah Green. Both seem to shade Isaac Brock's outlook across the new music, as the album unfolds a loose catharsis of the frontman rattling uneasily through middle-age insecurities and the angst of mortality. Caroline Rose opens with new LP Gentling the Horse at the Walt Whitman Mall. – DOUG FREEMAN

Bryson Tiller

Tuesday 13, Moody Center

Tiller's 2015 debut album, T R A P S O U L, signified his crafty ability to merge R&B sensibilities with trap production. Near the peak of his stardom, a feature on 2016 DJ Khaled cut "Ima Be Alright" actually offers another great thesis: "I love to get on tracks that I can rap and spit facts on." That rapping ability shines through on Detroit-hip-hop-inspired 2024 track "Whatever She Wants," which unexpectedly acted as a comeback for the Louisville native. This tour comes after 2025 double disc Solace & the Vices. Arrive early for Ty Dolla $ign.

DreTheGr8

Thursday 15, Friendly Rio Market

On his first single of the year, "Whats Purpose," local rapper DreTheGr8 takes a new approach with his personal, honest lyricism by tackling common topics such as fatherhood over a gospel beat. He'll perform at Rock N' Rio, a free event showcasing several rappers based in the Greater Austin area.

Black Artists Rock

Thursday 15, Soundspace at Captain Quack's

Scott Strickland's event series celebrating Black musicians making waves in Austin returns. Soulstress Taméca Jones, Chief Cleopatra, and Pascal Kerong'A join Strickland on the bill.

ACL Fest 2026 gets down and dirty BY CARYS ANDERSON, CAROLINE DREW, MIRANDA GARZA, DOUG FREEMAN & RAOUL HERNANDEZ

You've seen the pictures. Fall showers combined with thousands of footsteps to make the first weekend of Austin City Limits Fest feel like Glastonbury – UK rock performances and blissful 70-something temperatures included. Abandoned shoes, lost sunglasses, and even construction machinery working to sop up rain puddles and level puddles of pungent mud littered Zilker Park's Great Lawn, a shocking sight to behold that, fortunately, didn't deter this year's artists from delivering great performances. Here are the highlights from the two-weekend fest's first foray, and stay tuned for more coverage when the Chronicle returns for round two.

CMAT'S CAMPY EURO-COUNTRY KILLS

Dolly, Shania, Elvis, and a lot of Dublin course through Ciara Mary-Alice Thompson, who performs as CMAT with the theatrical flair of a pop star and a drag queen's gay love child. Tooth gems and "JESUS ROCKS"-declaring belt gleaming, the Irish musician and her sixpiece "Sexy CMAT Band" brought choreo and last year's acclaimed EURO-COUNTRY to "Austin Titty Limits."

Opener "The Jamie Oliver Petrol Station" set a steady, sashaying groove, Daniel Vildósola's atmospheric pedal steel and Colm Conlan's tasteful, wood-paneled keyboard adding light twangy flourishes to Morgan Karabel and William Bishop's grounding rhythms. Thompson herself, while stalking the catwalk and hamming up operatic vocal runs throughout 2023 Crazymad, for Me cut "Have Fun!" and EURO-COUNTRY single "When a Good Man Cries," shared the spotlight with her band with a collectivist attitude found in few solo performers. Twisting and two-stepping, she welcomed bassist Bishop and aptly named dress-donning guitarist Jack "Skirt Cobain" Wolter to "make it sexy" with her near the front of the catwalk, duetted with fiddle player Holly Carpenter during "Take a Sexy Picture of Me," and slapped the ass of cartwheeling, twerking keyboardist Conlan in between group line dances and King-inspired windmill arms.

Scattered showers cut the sun, but 91% humidity prompted the singer to take her shirt off anyway. "That barely helped!" she cheered, Sixties-styled bra pointing straight ahead. Steering the crowd through the cathartic chanted chorus of "Stay for Something," CMAT let loose one last banshee wail before disco dancing off the scorched AmEx stage.

JESSE WELLES RALLIES A TRUTH-TO-POWER RESISTANCE

Jesse Welles' online notoriety for his quirky, quick-witted ditties railing against the hypocrisies of our time don't quite do justice to the Arkansas songwriter's jam-fueled power with a full band. Although he sauntered onto the T-Mobile stage solo with the familiar backdrop screen "under the powerlines" to rip through a skewering rendition of "The Nerd Reich," when the full quintet emerged for "Join Ice," a full chugging breakdown commenced. The mud-caked crowd roared in appreciation for the biting satires and truth-to-power takedowns, with one flag declaring "FUCK ICE" and another mocking the Gadsden "Don't Tread on Me" flag with Beavis' Cornholio. In other words, Welles was in his element.

"It's good to be in the walled garden. It's good to be in Talarico country," he smiled between "The Ballad of Big Balls" and "Red." The two rippingly executed covers of Black Sabbath's "War Pigs" and Tom Petty's "I Won't Back Down" hit perfectly in the 15-song, hourlong set, as well as the impromptu turn into CCR's "Have You Ever Seen the Rain?" as the clouds opened up in the late Friday afternoon. Welles wasn't all bite and rage though, as the penultimate "Good Morning America" offered a solo benediction of hope for the country, even as he closed with the sharp dagger of "War Isn't Murder." Welles may not necessarily be the voice of a generation, but he's certainly harnessing its frustrations to full effect.

GROCERY BAG MAKES HEAVY HISTORY

ACL's history of heavy remains on par with its interest in jazz. Queens of the Stone Age (2007), The Sword (2010), Metallica and Deftones (2018), GNR (2019), and Miley Cyrus (2021) sum up most of the former. And yet, from no less than the tiny BMI stage, Austin alt-punks Grocery Bag helped triangulate what felt like an ACL Fest moment.

Starting just as Aussie DIY hammer Amyl & the Sniffers finished on the headlining AmEx stage, the homegrown quartet yanked hard on its chain saw and let loose for the better part of an hour late Friday afternoon. Sunbaked or sodden, sunscreen or soaked socks – choose your festival fate. Mud and slop suited Grocery Bag's dirty, gritty recoil. Guitarist Dillon Aitala did most of the talking ("What the fuck is up, ACL?") and even a half leap in front of the drum riser, but singer/guitarist Isabella Martinez yelped and snarled a hard focus despite the drums of friend Jimmy Mercado nearly drowning her out.

White Reaper once scythed the same stage, but Grocery Bag's barrage – let's not forget bassist Logan Kerman – set some sort of decibel high-water mark. And like an Oh Sees marathon, they never let up. "I'm excited for Turnstile over there," nodded Martinez to her left at other header stage T-Mobile, on which the Baltimore hardcore punks demolished a historic set in service of a mud mosh. Since rap and country are off the table (this ACL, anyway), more hardcore, please – more punk, more metal. More Grocery Bag. – RAOUL HERNANDEZ

CHARLI XCX PLAYS THE POP STAR

The BRAT tour didn't have pyro. A few white lights, a sparse black stage, and those vulnerable hyperpop bangers did the talking for the longtime cult figure-turned-bona fide pop star in 2024. Now, as the British songwriter reckons with celebrity and craft on this summer's Music, Fashion, Film, Charli xcx veers left with a cinematic live show, one designed for festival magnetism and curated with a sophisticated artist's eye.

Charli stood with a live drummer, guitarist, and synth/bass player from a towering tiered platform, glowing and industrial, for opener "Rock Music." Projected at first in black-and-white like Music, Fashion, Film's austere album art, the cameras flashed to full color as the band crunched and glitched through the track's pounding chorus. The song, Charli has insisted, claims its titular genre only as a joke, but as the band whirred through that and follow-up "Yeah," nonsensical lyrics, laser beam synths, and big dumb guitar riffs swirled in an intoxicating mixture of, yes, rock & roll – what is rock music if not a racket that inspires thousands to jump around as one?

"Apple" and other "Club Classics" – including "Girl, So Confusing" and "Guess" without their big-name features – zeroed focus on Charli's newest material, though she did throw OG fans "pink diamond" and "Track 10." Costume changes and a lingerie-clad, 20-dancer runway strut during "Card Declined" augmented her dramatic vision.

Though fans spotted Lorde in the audience, the "little surprise" Charli teased online Friday afternoon proved to be her Sweat tourmate Troye Sivan, who gave the artist a breather while he performed "Le Boy" and "Party." A collaboration – they have many – would've enthralled more than a Sivan solo moment, but Charli's closer did the trick.

"They are dead. They are gone. No one lasts forever," David Cronenberg's voice repeated, as the singer wrapped with the melancholy MFF finale. Block letters captioned the director's monologue on AmEx's life-sized screens; as Charli's voice faded and his recording warped, the singer and her crew stood solemn, posed, as his words – "OBLIVION IS FREEDOM" – burned the monitors.

Pensive and commanding: This is pop music, as presented by Charli xcx. – CARYS ANDERSON

RISING FOLK ROCKER EMMA OGIER SHARES DEBUT ALBUM SNEAK PEEK

Gloomy skies and a lightly mud-delayed start time set a fitting scene for Emma Ogier's cerebral, country-twilled Southern rock storytelling, though bleeding pop dance tracks from Temper City across the swampy field proved a challenging distraction for the folk-inspired act's quiet-loud arrangements. Amps cranked and a little crunchy, the Houston-raised, Nashville-based songwriter and her backing band persevered, much to the delight of a crowd packed with family, friends, and burgeoning fans.

Clutching her acoustic guitar, Ogier had the humble posture and incisive songwriting chops of a young Gillian Welch, with her increasingly complex sound growing louder as the November 11 release of her debut album, Fly 1111, nears. Enthusiastic cheers welcomed the distortion-infused chorus of the record's unreleased title track and a ballad-esque ode to complicated love on the road promised the record contains more catnip for fans of Wednesday and MJ Lenderman. A healthy handful of the steadily growing afternoon crowd had already learned the words to September single "Keep You" and February breakout hit "Baby Don't Hurt Me."

Ogier received the endorsement of Dominic Fike a month ago, when the singer-songwriter shared a concert video titled "This is Emma Ogier" – just as Texas-born rap collective BROCKHAMPTON did for him in 2019 – thus catapulting her still-developing discography to new audiences. The cornerstones of Ogier's genre foundation feel under development, but the young songwriter is quickly gaining recognition for her evocative lyricism and precisely paced, lilting melodies, laced with classic country harmonies and emo grit.

WELCOME TO SUKI WATERHOUSE'S LOVELAND

British starlet Suki Waterhouse graduated to the T-Mobile stage after her last ACL appearance in 2023 and proved well beyond measure that the slot was hers for the taking. She commanded the stage with the vibrant prowess of a retro rock-pop femme fatale. Theatricality coursed through the 50-minute set, which kicked off with a voicemail from the songstress as she frantically rummaged through her wardrobe backstage, finally pulling out a gold arrow and holding it up with a relieved grin. When she finally emerged, she plunged the arrow into her chest, then proudly raised it overhead. From there, the siren bounded across the stage in a tiger-print leotard and plaid puff sleeves, bringing an infectious fervor to songs like the brass-heavy "OMG" and "Back in Love." Before the latter, she welcomed the crowd to "Loveland," asking if ACL was ready to "fall back in love." Her cover of Pat Benatar's "Love Is a Battlefield" offered her Eighties fantasy another moment to shine, and "Dream Woman" gave her crystalline vocals room to build toward a towering crescendo. For all the spectacle, Waterhouse still managed to make the stage feel intimate. She brought "Good Looking" to the barricade, singing directly to fans before dropping to her knees during "Weirdo" to serenade a laptop. She closed by climbing her platform and falling backward into the arms of a stagehand, ending her Loveland fantasy with one final dramatic flourish. – MIRANDA GARZA

YOUNG MIKO CEMENTS HER STAR POWER

Thousands of hips were stirred into action the second Young Miko stepped onto the American Express stage. From the barricade to the back of the crowd, fans went word-for-word with the Puerto Rican rapper, proclaiming her bad girl type on "Likey Likey" and expanding that definition to all women of every hair color and body type on "Lisa," and other favorites.

Backed by a live band and a roving crew of dancers, the songwriter took on rock star status when racing guitars and thundering drums amplified her blend of trap and reggaeton, and adopted a rap princess attitude when expertly performing extensive choreography alongside her dancer posse. Near the end of the 50-minute set, shortened by mud delays, the group reenacted the opening sequence of the "BIAF <3" music video on a white bench, though the clouds overhead didn't burst to re-create the short's ending. Taking the stage solo for tracks like "Chulo pt. 2" and "Esa nena," the former fútbol player and tattoo artist proved to have more than enough charisma to hold the crowd's attention all on her own. She closed with "WASSUP," a swaggering Hey Mamas anthem that samples Lil Wayne and Static Major's "Lollipop."

The biggest and latest-scheduled rapper on this year's lineup, Young Miko delivered a headliner-caliber performance with a pre-5pm start time. Fans weren't duped by the move – many who ran to the stage early in the day breathlessly relayed their excitement for the artist – but newcomers will soon be wishing for a reprise. – CAROLINE DREW

RODRIGO Y GABRIELA'S SIX-STRING SERENADES

When Rodrigo Sánchez and Gabriela Quintero broke out in 2006 with their eponymous third album, the CDMX acoustic guitar duo crystallized certain six-string truths. Apocalyptica proved Metallica's universality across genres, but Rodrigo y Gabriela wrote that same material into a bigger book. Late Saturday afternoon in a brimming Tito's Tent, the fire-n-ice dyad marked two expansive decades serenading A-town. A little grayer (him) but bouncier even (her), R&G did what they do singularly: tame rowdy audiences with 12 strings of expansive boundary pushing.

The flamenco strums, fingerpicking, and percussive beating on wood layered into a veritable flurry of styles and modalities. Last month's winner OurHome beats (and claps) out a modern classicism not unlike the Gipsy Kings before them, both acts blazing proof that axes chop a greater efficiency sans singers. "Muchas gracias," from Quintero, made for most of the set's small talk, with new stunner "Somos Como Tú" stripped of its studio counterpart's gripping vocalizations yet hearty nonetheless. "Akatsuki," "Monster," and the title track alternated between a Jekyll & Hyde duality both crushing and caressing. Seldom is so much said wordlessly.

Side by side, Quintero sawing her fretboard and Sánchez pounding on his instrument as if making kindling, Rodrigo y Gabriela ended with improv rather than their introductory practice of turning Pink Floyd's "Wish You Were Here" into a House of Rock hymnal. Just as well, since ACL demonstrated they, too, now dwell there amongst the gods. – RAOUL HERNANDEZ

BLEACHERS RACE DOWN E STREET

A few weeks ago, Bruce Springsteen joined Bleachers onstage at Asbury Park in New Jersey to play their 2020 collaboration "Chinatown." If Saturday evening's ACL set is any indication, the Boss should have felt right at home with Jack Antonoff's crew. The sextet ripped with all the energy of the E Street Band as Bleachers rallied the T-Mobile stage into a frenzy, braced most notably by the dual sax blast of Evan Smith and Zem Audu.

Opening with the pulsing fuzz of "sideways" from this year's everyone for ten minutes LP, Antonoff climbed around the stage setup like a madcap recording studio, immediately setting the anthemic tone that the outfit maintained through their hourlong, 14-song set. The super producer dripped sweat ripping with a rabid, chaotic energy through "Jesus Is Dead" and "dirty wedding dress," while the saxmen faced off for "Don't Go Dark."

The high point may have come in contrast though, as the band sat down behind Antonoff for an acoustic version of his first single, 2014's "I Wanna Get Better," bringing the crowd to a hush except for the soft singing along. Likewise, the songwriter's father joined on guitar for "How Dare You Want More," and "Rollercoaster" and "Don't Take the Money" reignited with a touch of the National's darker brooding edge.

By the time the band reprised "I Wanna Get Better" with the full kinetic production and cathartic closer "Stop Making This Hurt," Bleachers had transformed the muddy field into a sweaty Saturday night New Jersey club that Springsteen would appreciate. – DOUG FREEMAN

LORDE, LAYER BY LAYER

When Lorde first played ACL at 17, she was still figuring out how to inhabit the strange, lonely world she had built around herself. Twelve years later, she returned with Virgin and a live show devoted to pulling that world apart.

She began her 83-minute performance by fastening EKG monitors to her chest and hooking herself up to a heart monitor, immediately turning her body into part of the production. Two box-like platforms became stages, enclosures, and screens; two dancers moved around her with an expressive physicality that felt closer to emotional counterpoint than backup choreography.

Rather than presenting Virgin as a clean break, Lorde folded it into a full arc of her catalog. "Royals," "Buzzcut Season," and "The Louvre" shed light on her earlier work, while "Girl, So Confusing" brought her recent Charli xcx collaboration to the stage, offering a splash of playfulness amid an otherwise introspective night.

The set's most affecting imagery came when past and present versions of the New Zealand artist seemed to occupy the same space. During the aching "Hard Feelings," a bull's-eye appeared across her back as her heartbeat pulsed behind her. "Liability" projected footage of her younger self across her body. On "Shapeshifter," she crouched atop a platform, looking down at the camera below. Each image seemed to ask what remained of the person she was and what it had made of her.

Between cuts, the headliner reflected on the 12 years since she first played the festival, remembering how Austin embraced her when she was an "awkward freak from really far away." She described the years since as a process of "breaking down the layers, trying to find myself." That process came into sharp focus during "David," when a massive flag unfurled over the crowd, its center reading "I DON'T BELONG TO ANYONE" and its edges marked "2013" and "2026." The singer tore the monitors from her chest before launching into "Ribs," descending to the barricade to sing among front-row devotees. Fireworks erupted overhead, a fittingly grand finale to a production that found its power in intimacy.

Jess Williamson

JESS WILLIAMSON SERENADES THE GLOOMY AFTERNOON

There was something poetically fitting about Jess Williamson singing in the spitting rain Sunday afternoon. Her songs of yearning restlessness, lost loves, and determined independence suited the dreary forecast as the Texas songwriter made her ACL Fest debut opening the Miller Lite stage to a sparse crowd.

Out later this week, her upcoming sixth LP, A Mile South of Heaven, represented heavily in the 10-song set, but the opening double shot of "Chasing Spirits" and "Topanga Two Step" from 2023's Time Ain't Accidental set the mood of an L.A. washed in a lonely, wanting dream. The new album's lead single "Goodbye to All That" reset with a country escape though, Zack Wiggs' pedal steel whining against Williamson's twang, while "Tracking the Tropics" pulsed with a nostalgia for the songwriter's salad days in Austin.

The new material leaned more into Williamson's Texas-styled songwriter roots, with strong melodies that hearken to her Plains project with Katie Crutchfield. Still, the unreleased "Hum of the City" shifted provocatively with an almost Joni Mitchell touch.

Closing with a dip into 2020's Sorceress ("Wind on Tin") and a couple of Accidental favorites ("Hunter," "Roads") only seemed to emphasize the strength of the new songs, and how easily Williamson inhabits country rhythms compared to the beats behind her previous album. As she noted in closing, "Thank you Austin. It's good to be home."

FLIGHT BY NOTHING'S GOT FANS

Miley Cyrus clearly hadn't seen the appetite for Flight by Nothing when she declared the kids don't wanna dance. Nearly 300,000 monthly Spotify listeners indeed translated to an impressive turnout for the indie pop quintet, launched here in Austin a decade ago. Even in the rain, friends and fans alike turned up to the 2pm disco, lyrics memorized and hips ready to wiggle.

Sauntering onstage last in a saucy grand entrance, singer-guitarist Conner Redden performed with a Brendon Urie-like theatricality, reaching into a falsetto with ease and grooving with gravitas when fellow axeman Pacco Salinas, in a purple trench coat Prince would covet, strummed Nile Rodgers riffs and took many a solo. Alternately slapping and picking his bass, Porfii Rubio's low end at turns doubled Salinas' muted chug and set the groove with intricate solo melodies. Drummer Sam Morales and keyboardist Huey Houston backed Redden on the mic with equal charisma, though Houston, in a barely buttoned button-up, took the lead on cuts including 2023 single "track 02."

"It's such a dream to be here," Houston said, more than once. "I can't believe we're doing it."

"We got any moshers in the crowd?" Redden asked before finale "COCAINE IS OK!" No shot, it seemed, that a band who'd previously covered Player's "Baby Come Back" would have the heft. Yet as the fivepiece launched into the ripper, their hometown obliged, bouncing and slam dancing with glee.

– CARYS ANDERSON

GEESE FLY CLOSE TO THE SUN

A discordant supercut of Knicks shots and Texas-tinged clips – the South Austin tug-of-war-winning "Bubbas," an impressive mutton buster, etc. – fittingly welcomed Gen Z's premier rock band to the stage. From that point on, Geese set about distorting and distressing the seams of their discography for their playing pleasure. Stripped of cohering choral elements, a sparse arrangement of "Husbands" opened the set, before "Getting Killed" transitioned into a ferocious and noisy, spoken word-adorned introduction to 3D Country apocalypse hymn "2122."

The screens and the New York rockers were in no-frills mode, barely addressing the crowd even when technical difficulties and re-tunings provided a pause in the action. A hi-hat malfunction temporarily sidelined drummer Max Bassin, prompting a stripped-down performance of "Domoto," where frontman Cameron Winter's baroque falsetto earned an earnest cheer and a rare smile from the vocalist in return. "Cowboy Nudes" and "Au Pays du Cocaine" went down largely as recorded; the tempo of "Taxes" received some mischief and the furor of the already explosive, mosh-pit-stirring finale "Trinidad" was chaotically relished.

For two albums, Geese was an acquired taste with a few easier-to-swallow songs. Since 2025 sensation Getting Killed, a swath of the mainstream developed a craving for their often cacophonous, structureless songwriting. The much-discussed rise was aided by marketing firm Chaotic Good and Winter's hit solo song "Love Takes Miles," but rewards an album that is no less noisy and experimental. Amid accusations that their newfound fame has more to do with algorithm finagling than substantive rock writing, the group's wholehearted embrace of their least harmonious elements on the festival stage felt like a sneering assertion: They don't care if you like them.

BLOOD ORANGE CREATES HIS OWN FREQUENCY

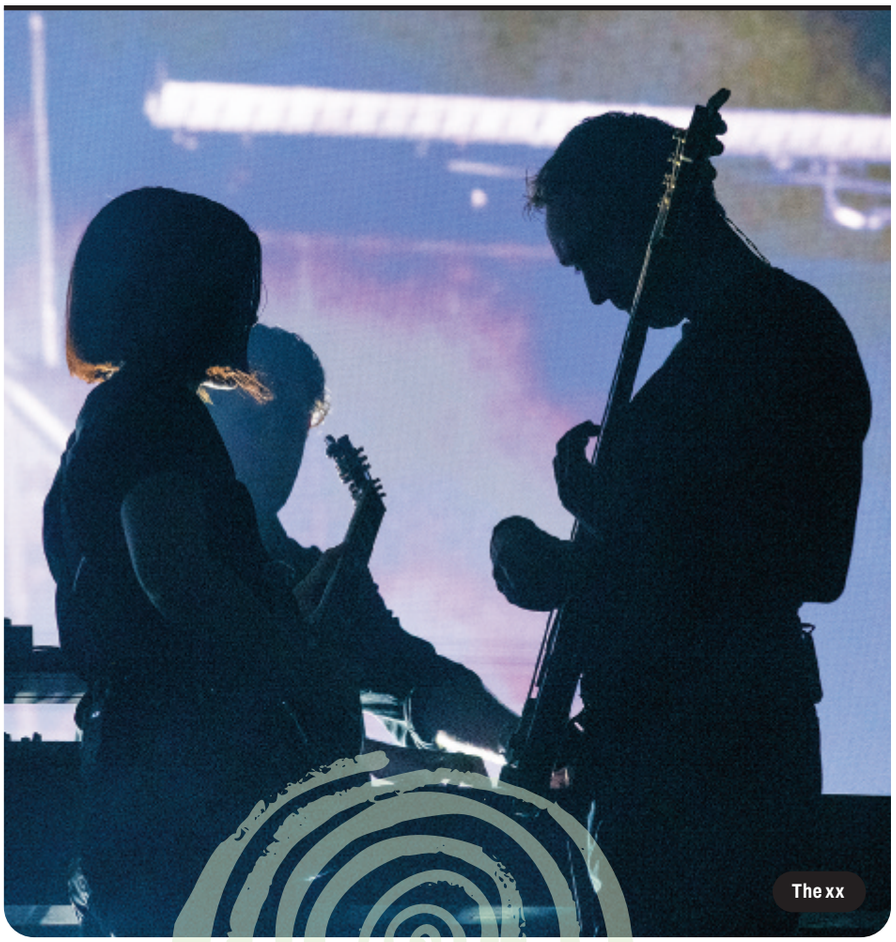

Dev Hynes put his musicianship front and center during Blood Orange's 56-minute set, bouncing between electric riffs, a thin-bodied electric cello, and a three-sided rig of keyboards and production equipment. He seemed happiest when his hands were busy.

During a stripped-back cover of Björk's "All Is Full of Love," the British singer drew a soft, haunting melody from the cello's slender strings, creating an airy intimacy around each note. "Jesus Freak Lighter" gave him room to tear into his guitar, while the infectious funk of "Uncle ACE" brought a palpable physicality to his playing. Later, he folded over the keys during the synth-soaked Empress Of duet "Best to You," almost disappearing within the rig.

His breathy vocals sounded weightless throughout, though backing singers Eva Tolkin and Ian Isiah occasionally took the spotlight themselves, including on "You're Not Good Enough," originally featuring Samantha Urbani. With headphones pressed over his ears for much of the set, Hynes appeared to be listening to the music as closely as he was performing it, shutting himself into a private music mind palace. His inwardness made the ending especially striking: "Charcoal Baby" brought psychedelic-soul splendor before "Champagne Coast" closed with a surge of heavy drums. When the closing number gave way to silence, Hynes stood still for a beat, almost as though he had just returned to himself after being so immersed in his own R&B-inflected soundscape.

NOSTALGIA, AND DANCE MUSIC, TAKES THE XX TO HIGHER PLACES

The xx might prefer a gothic atmosphere, but there's a sweetness to their music – to the way Romy and Oliver Sim's voices melt together, to the immediacy of their simple melodies, to the way their most electronic, beat-centric moments move you into a wordless trance. Nine years since their last ACL performance – and since their last new album – the English trio proved timeless Sunday at Zilker Park.

Black-and-white cameras and plumes of white smoke awashed T-Mobile in Robert Eggers twilight as guitarist Romy and bassist Sim crooned "Crystalised," "Say Something Loving," and "Islands." Stark images of the co-vocalists, often leaving their posts to play face-to-face at producer Jamie xx's center-stage MPC setup, subverted traditional rock & roll gender roles; no root note relegation for the woman of this band. Frequent close-up shots of Jamie xx's hands, triggering samples and drumming live rhythms, likewise underlined his essential role in the outfit, as the most ethereal aspects of their dream pop output became tangible.

As the group moved from their early indie rock lullabies ("VCR") into "On Hold" and "I Dare You," from latest LP I See You, and plenty of cuts from each member's solo catalogs, their projections sprung to living color. All the better for these increasingly electronic offerings, which – like this year's festival lineup at large – yielded more dancing, more bouncing, more human connection than rock purists might've imagined.

Midway through the set, Sim thanked the xx's fans for sticking around "after such a long time" as the band picked up performing after eight years away. They didn't play, or mention, any new music.

"Get that paycheck!" someone behind me cheered in response. He didn't sound sarcastic.

"Fragile Vessels" Exposes the Toll of Extreme Heat

Multidisciplinary exhibit at dadaLab juxtaposes thermal imaging and oral storytelling

BY LINA FISHER

How do you describe the feeling of a 100-degree day in Austin? Temperature is at once an ephemeral and a universal experience – both clear and unavoidable, yet strangely evading description. It's fitting, then, that "Fragile Vessels: A Gathering and Exhibition on Extreme Heat" included a bit of almost every media – documentary, field notes, thermal imaging, oil painting, film projection, zines, installation, and, of course, conversation – in an effort to explain and document what we all experience six months out of the year.

In partnership with Austin Public Health, Workers Defense Project, the UT-City CoLab, Go Austin/Vamos Austin, and the UT Digital Writing and Research Lab, documentary filmmaker Ái Vuong and UT Ph.D. candidate Maddie Bruegger created a multidisciplinary understanding of heat that lasted two days at dadaLab. Through community conversations and artist talks, a bilingual meditation emerged. The centerpiece was the Thermal Witnessing Project, a collection of thermal camera images and accompanying notes taken last summer by 15 Austinites organized by GAVA in the Rundberg neighborhood, one of the least protected from the heat in Austin.

At first the images were hard to make out – blobs of bright orange, yellow, and blue with numbers on top – but, coupled with the notes, took on a slightly chilling significance. The numbers were the center, max, and minimum temperatures sensed by the thermal camera.

"When I took this photo, the temperature gauge on my SUV indicated that it was 99 degrees Fahrenheit," wrote resident Humberto A. Pérez on September 18, 2025, of a photo taken at the Northgate Shopping Center on the corner of Rundberg Lane and Lamar. "And as I look at this photo I can see that a significant portion of the parking lot asphalt and vehicles are in the 140 degrees Fahrenheit range."

"Rundberg Lane has a reputation for being an area of Austin that experiences higher rates of violent crime," he continued. "Can you really blame the people in this area [for] being angry and furious as the heat coming up from the asphalt is 140 degrees?"

Heat is a silent killer, and the deaths it causes are vastly underreported, according to a recent NPR study that estimated five times more deaths in the U.S. each year than the CDC reports. It can exacerbate cardiovascular disease, but the death certificate will only list a heart attack as the cause of death. It's particularly dangerous for workers outside, something Angel Hernandez's triptych of oil paintings, Mirage, depicts.

In the piece, a construction worker raises his hand above his face to shield it, as ghostly runners, picnickers, and kayakers relax and recreate in a dreamlike tableau above him. Below the painting, a hard hat, hi-vis vest, boots, and bags of concrete suggest that summer is enjoyed, or suffered, along class lines – while construction workers toil on 140-degree asphalt, remote workers Strava their jog around Lady Bird Lake and jump in Barton Springs.

Works like Lisa B. Woods' Dealing with the Elephant, One Room at a Time, a 15-by-15-inch box containing a rumpled dollhouse bed, are more universal. Thermal video is projected in a window pattern onto the wall of the "bedroom" and a static ceiling fan features lamely. We've all felt the unique malaise that comes from a 100-degree day outside our bedroom windows, permeating the indoors, especially if one lives without central air.

On its own, the visuals of the show are a powerful document. But the residents' lived experiences elevate the exhibition to the level of oral history, calling into question how well the municipal solutions we have are working. On October 17, 2025, Sayra Janeth Castro Galvan wrote, "I was thinking about how beautiful these bus stops look; they're so elegant. I felt really, really bad and sad that we have this beautiful elegant bench but can't use it – it's extremely dangerous. It's made of metal, it gets so, so hot that it can cause serious burns; the roof is useless."

Community members who spoke at a panel discussion on Sunday offered a simple solution: more tree coverage. Pérez said the project has inspired him to "want to advocate more ... so that we can get our neighbors to plant some more trees. Because that's the one area where we have control." ■

Chilling documentary about the Israeli offensive in Gaza reveals how AI and surveillance culture has been used to normalize mass murder BY RICHARD WHITTAKER

Naza is not simply a film about the ongoing Israeli bombing campaign against Gaza.

It is a warning.

Starting in 2023, directors Yuval Abraham and Rachel Szor spent almost two years interviewing over 100 people involved in the Gaza offensive, from soldiers to drone operators to intelligence officers. For the film, 24 of them were interviewed on the rooftops of Tel Aviv by night. Around them, the city's residents walk around their high-rise apartments, curtains open, exposed to external surveillance. Only in its closing moments is that concrete calm truly contrasted with the devastation in Gaza.

The title is weighted with meaning. At the simplest level, it is a contraction of nezek agavi, or collateral damage. It also sounds almost exactly like naza'a, an Arabic word meaning "to remove." But it is also a name, meaning honesty. Naza blends all three into the year's most powerful documentary.

First, the interviewees explain in great, technical detail how intelligence agencies collect vast amounts of digital data on the residents of Gaza. They did this under the pretense of accurately targeting Hamas targets and then set such high levels of "acceptable" civilian casualties that it's irrelevant. One actual target for 15 naza, 15 family members, 15 neighbors? That's fine under this policy, even if you don't hit the original target.

Naza'a? That comes from the increasing realization that the offensive is nothing to do with eviscerating Hamas after the October 7 attacks, and simply about making Gaza uninhabitable for Palestinians.

And honesty? That's in the risks taken by the 24 onscreen interviewees and the dozens more who were part of the research-gathering process. It shows how disgusted even those who were willing participants have become by what is being done in their name. Even as they are castigated in their home country's press and by their own government, it's clear that they are patriots of the best kind.

Abraham and Szor don't ignore that there is still a threat to Israelis. As their sources speak, obscured by shadow and digital image and vocal manipulation, air raid sirens wail from incoming rockets. What the filmmakers are looking at is the scale and intent of the response. If it's not genocide, then why does one of the interviewees call it such? If it's not mass murder, then why does another confess to it? It's not on the filmmakers when one soldier compares himself to a Nazi, or when they excerpt an interview of Benjamin Netanyahu promoting his book, Terrorism: How the West Can Win, in which he describes terrorism in exactly the terms in which the interviewees describe Israeli rules of engagement in Gaza. No wonder Bibi is so furious at this film. The directors have basically created the closing argument for the prosecution in any future war crimes trial.

Without stating it explicitly, Abraham and Szor make it clear that none of this happened just because Israel decided to interweave the AI-powered tactical software dubbed Lavender into its decision-making process. It is the end result of decades of policies, quite literally dating back to the day that the first cornerstone was laid in Tel Aviv, and the first phone line was connected in Gaza. The mindset to carry out this operation and the systems required for this scale of data collection were woven into those moments.

That's why Naza is such an effective warning. It shows how supposedly impartial data can be used to enable bloodlust. Naza comes just as the Pentagon assembles a cadre of tech bros and political extremists including Elon Musk and VR gaming magnate-turned-military drone manufacturer Palmer Luckey for Project Meridian, their commissioned "future of warfare" white paper. Anything that Israel has done against Gaza could be used against any future American opponent. Or, more terrifyingly, us. ■

The Luv Doc

"Swimming in Huzzes"

Dear Luv Doc,

My huzz (if u dont know that means crush) is so cute and he's in my homeroom but he doesnt even notice pretty girls. I have to find a way to get my hands on him. So I started dating the quarterback of our high school team, I only started dating him to make my huzz jealous (and because of his sweet gyatt). He's giving weird looks to this girl (let's call her Amy), I think he's cheating but I ship them. I have this BFF and I tell him everything, but he's just staring at me when we have sleepovers, and not even at my face. He is totally lying about his girlfraind. He always gets the story wrong. I went over to my "boyfreinds" house today and he was also giving me weird looks, and as soon as I came in, he slammed the closet door like tung tung tung sahur was in there, but he is still giving me weird looks. I need to know who to choose, who likes me, and if I will ever find true love. – Aimless in Austin

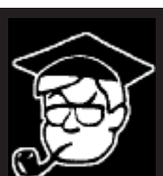

Thanks for the tip on the huzz, Aimless! I will add that term to my boomer lexicon and further annoy my friends and family. I have to admit I do likes me some slang. Gyatt is an especially satisfying example. Correct me if I'm wrong, but my guess is that it's short for "gyatt dayum that boy's got an impressive keister." I think it goes without saying that "gyatt" could be useful in any number of situations that don't include a roomful of men my age. I know this is probably something you'd prefer not to think about, but as your gym teacher probably tells you on the regular, there is a price to be paid for skipping leg day.

Here's my prognostication – and regardless of how insulting it's going to feel, it's one thousand percent accurate: You will find true love, just not in high school. I mean, people claim they find true love in high school, but I kind of think that only happens in small towns where the incidence of meth addiction trims the life expectancy down to the low 30s. In those places if you want to sire some progeny you need to graduate, get a singlewide, and get busy with the babymaking. However, here in a sophisticated metropolis like Austin, people your age are inundated with a bewildering number of possibilities, all of which begin after high school and possibly end a few years later with the AI apocalypse. But, barring robot Armageddon, that's when real life begins. It's also when real love begins. And who knows? Maybe after your huzz has been through some real shit – like battling swarms of hostile nanobots from a camouflaged bunker in West Lake – or simply cleaning out the grease trap to impress his boss at Chili's – he might become the kind of well-rounded snack you could devour for an eternity. Fingers crossed.

For now, my advice to you is to ditch the quarterback. Gyatt notwithstanding, his weird look giving is not a good sign, and it seems like you're at peace with him and Amy hooking up. Let's hope it was her in his closet and not that tung tung tung sahur fellow, who, if I'm being totally honest, seems a bit too body confident. You didn't describe your BFF as a huzz or a gyatt, so I'm going to disqualify him, even though you're having sleepovers. I guess you braid each other's hair? And then there's your huzz, who doesn't notice pretty girls. My guess is either he is an undercover cop like Nick Cannon in Underclassman, gay or questioning, or maybe he's just a young intellectual who is only attracted to girls with noodles under their rugs.

Happily, if he's the young intellectual, you know what to do! Cram for the exam! Get all book smart! And here's the deal: You're in the perfect place to do it! You probably even have a library in easy walking distance. You put in a couple thousand intense hours there and girl, you are going to be undeniably attractive – if not to your huzz, certainly to some D1 colleges with huzzes times 10. Now look, I may not be Einstein, but I do know love, and if you want to be loved, you need to bring something to the table other than looks. If you truly figure that out now, you're going to be swimming in huzzes when it really counts.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

OCT. 9 - OCT. 15

by Rob Brezsny

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Periodically, you have the cosmic right to receive precisely what you need. Life is duty-bound to deliver a close approximation of full satisfaction. I believe now is one of those times. So please be bold and articulate about naming the specific blessings you require. Write them down, speak them aloud, and pray for them – not as a demand, but as a hearty invitation. Then, for a while, live as if all of creation is indeed honor-bound to respond accordingly, adjusting its behavior so it's in harmony with the gifts you've asked for.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Every Thursday night, I haul my trash bin out to the street so the collectors can empty it the following morning. Most weeks it's three-quarters full. But now and then I produce an unusually large haul of debris. On those occasions, I have to turn into a one-person compaction crew: I grab a low-hanging branch of the persimmon tree, hoist myself up, drop down feet-first into the can, and bounce around to squash everything enough to squeeze in the overflow. Consider this my audition to be your role model, Scorpio. According to my reading of the celestial weather, it's time for you to consolidate and discard at least half a year's accumulation of obsolete clutter – both the invisible emotional kind and the tangible stuff filling your space.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Ancient navigators sometimes crossed vast stretches of sea by studying the swells beneath their boats. Their bodies were instruments of perception that enabled them to feel the subtle wave patterns generated by winds and distant islands. Your intuition has a similar sensitivity these days, Sagittarius. I hope you will trust it: what your whole being senses before your rational mind assembles the evidence. I call this fully embodied intelligence. It deserves a key role in your decision-making.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): I've never been a fan of Capricorn poet Kahlil Gibran (1883-1931). The ideas he expressed seem commonplace and sentimental to me. But his book The Prophet is an all-time bestseller translated into over 100 languages. Millions of readers have adored and benefited from his words, and he's acclaimed as a literary hero in his native Lebanon. So who cares what I think! I'll just shut up and appreciate the fact that he worked hard and published a lot. His disciplined, painstaking efforts have been widely inspirational. Let's make him your role model for the coming months. I think you're primed to create enduring offerings that nourish people's souls.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Think of an aspect of your life that you have always wished you could change but have assumed or feared you could never change. What if, sometime soon, you try to change it, but this time you do it with playful lightheartedness? You resolve to feel zero stress and have as much fun as possible as you try to shift how this problem works. You decide you will use your imagination to dream up unprecedented and even outrageous ways to break your trance and invite sweet liberation to swoop in.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Geologists tell us that over time, rocks really do get transformed under sustained pressure. Their material gets reorganized into denser, more stable stuff. This is an apt metaphor for you, dear Pisces. You're under pressure right now, and it may feel intense. But what if it's actually reconfiguring you? Maybe the constraints are what you need to make you more focused, more essential, and more real. Not all pressure is bad, and this is proof. Ask yourself: What is this pressure making possible that freedom couldn't create? Let yourself be reorganized.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): "Dear Oracle: My secret terror is being ordinary. I need to be special, and lately I'm worried I'm just average and unremarkable. That thought is repugnant to me! Can you offer any advice? – Afraid of Average." Dear Afraid: The pressure to be extraordinary is exhausting because it's the wrong goal. Your birthright and your life assignment aren't about being special in the sense of better-than. You're simply meant to be vividly, generously, amazingly yourself. In the coming weeks, I invite you to trade the anxious hunt for superiority for the warm, throbbing joy of full self-expression. Shine because it feels fantastic, not to outrank anyone.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Ravens sometimes hide food while pretending to conceal it elsewhere, especially if another raven is observing. They're strategic and imaginative and aware of how they're perceived. With their social intelligence as inspiration, I will encourage you to think more consciously about the stories you're broadcasting. Which precious projects will flourish better if protected from premature scrutiny? Do you have any in-progress blooms that really should continue to incubate before being revealed? Discernment isn't deception. p.s. Conversely, there may be a part of you that deserves greater visibility.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The Taurus philosopher Søren Kierkegaard wrote that life must be lived forward but can only be understood backward. You Geminis are naturally inclined to resist that advice. Many of you analyze experiences while they're still unfolding. Can I coax you to try a different approach in the coming weeks? As usual, you may be tempted to figure everything out immediately. But the most useful clarity won't arrive until later, as you survey what has occurred and recognize patterns you couldn't see in real time. So try to stay curious rather than overly diagnostic. Keep gathering impressions, stories, and clues. Allow events to transpire like chapters in a book whose ending you haven't reached yet.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The Germans have a word, Sehnsucht, for a feeling that my English language can't quite convey: a deep, sweet, aching longing for something you can't name. It may be a faraway home you've never visited or a wholeness you seem to remember without ever having had it. Most people treat this yearning as a problem to be fixed or numbed. But I think it's sacred information, Cancerian, and you're especially fluent in it right now. Don't rush to resolve the ache or explain it away. Instead, follow it like a scent. What is your Sehnsucht pointing toward? Let it lead you toward the beauty and meaning your soul is homesick for.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Botanists know that climbing vines have a simple approach. They keep extending their sensitive tendrils until they discover something sturdy enough to support upward growth. Their progress depends on continual experimentation. I love it when you imitate this style of intelligence, Leo, which I think will be especially useful and successful during the coming weeks. So instead of demanding guarantees before beginning a new endeavor, offer exploratory feelers. Ask friendly questions. Test prototypes. The right support system probably already exists, but may not reveal itself until you reach toward it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): One of my favorite Virgos works in a museum cleaning centuries-old paintings with exquisite patience. She uses tiny swabs and gentle solvents to lift away layers of darkened varnish and grime. She's an expert at making the original colors emerge so vividly that the painting looks newly made. But her work demands artful restraint. If she presses too hard or applies the wrong solvent, she could destroy the very thing she means to reveal. This approach can be your specialty in the coming weeks, Virgo. I hope you will attend to valuables that have been obscured by accumulated grime, like old habits, stale assumptions, and other people's projections. Your task is to gently lift it all away and let the true colors shine.

CAUSE NO. D-1-GN-26-007898
EX PARTE, GRAYSON COUNTY MUNICIPAL UTILITY DISTRICT NO. 8
IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF TRAVIS COUNTY, TEXAS
201st JUDICIAL DISTRICT
NOTICE OF PROCEEDING AND ORDER
The Court issues the following Notice of Proceeding and Order pursuant to Chapter 1205 of the Texas Government Code.
NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN to all persons who (i) reside within the territory of Grayson County Municipal Utility District No. 8 ("District"); (ii) own property located within the District's boundaries; (iii) are taxpayers of the District; or (iv) have or claim a right, title, or interest in any property or money to be affected by the proceedings described below and/or the issuance of the declaratory judgment described below. For purposes of this Notice of Proceeding and Order, the persons named in sections (i), (ii), (iii), and (iv) above shall be referred to as the "Interested Parties."
The District is municipal utility district serving an area in Grayson County located outside of the City of Van Alstyne, Texas ("Van Alstyne") and specifically outside of Van Alstyne's extra-territorial jurisdiction ("ETJ"). The District was created pursuant to Chapter 7912A, Texas Special District Local Laws Code. The District seeks to legally validate its boundaries as of the date of the District's February 9, 2026, order adding land to the District's boundaries and redefining the District's boundaries.

The District's position to the Court is as follows: On February 9, 2026, the District's Board of Directors approved the annexation of certain property into the District's boundaries. The property annexed into the District was previously removed from Van Alstyne's ETJ, effective January 18, 2025. As of February 9, 2026, and through to present day, all property, including the annexed property, within the District's boundaries is located outside of any municipality's corporate limits or ETJ. Accordingly, Tex. Local Gov't Code § 42.0425 does not apply and the District was not required to obtain consent from Van Alstyne or any other municipality for the annexation. The District further maintains to the Court: On May 7, 2022, the District held an election in which the voters of the District approved the creation of the District, elected permanent directors, and authorized the issuance of a combined $175,000,000 in debt to be paid from unlimited ad-valorem tax for water, sewer, drainage, and road facilities. The voters also approved a tax for operations and maintenance for such facilities to not exceed $1.00 per $100 of valuation of all taxable property within the District.
As such, the District has filed an in rem action for declaratory judgment (the "Petition") seeking that:
(1) the land annexed into the District on or about February 9, 2026, was not within the corporate limits or extraterritorial jurisdiction of the City of Van Alstyne, Texas, or any other municipality on that date or any time thereafter to the present, and, therefore, the current boundaries of the District's approximate 331.074-acre territory are legal and valid and incontestable as a matter of law; and
(2) pursuant to and subject to the applicable requirements of Texas Water Code, Chapter 49, Subchapter F, and Chapter 54, Subchapter F, the District has the authority to issue the bonds for water, sanitary sewer, and road purposes, which bonds the District's voters duly authorized via a bond election held on May 7, 2022.
A full description of the lawsuit and the relief sought is contained in the District's Petition, Ex Parte Grayson County Municipal Utility District No. 8, Cause No. D-1-GN-26-007898, filed on August 28, 2026, in the Judicial District Court of Travis County, Texas.
IT IS HEREBY ORDERED and Notice is hereby given, that any Interested Party or the Attorney General of the State of Texas may become a named party to these proceedings by pleading to the Petition on or before, and may appear for hearing and trial in the courtroom of the Judicial District Court of Travis County, Texas at 10:00 a.m. on Monday, October 19, 2026, it being the first Monday after the expiration of 20 days from the date this Order is issued. The hearing will be on the central docket in Travis County where judges exchange benches voluntarily to ensure that hearings such as this one are able to take place timely and properly pursuant to the statute, and the hearing is not dependent on one judge's individual calendar or docket. The specific judge and courtroom for this matter will be announced the Friday before the hearing is to take place. The hearing will be held at the Travis County Civil and Family Courts Facility located at 1700 Guadalupe Street, Austin, Texas 78701.
After October 19, 2026, Interested Parties may become named parties by intervention on leave of court.
IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, that, at such hearing and trial, any Interested Parties desiring to do so may appear, and the Attorney General of the State Texas shall appear, and show cause why the prayers of the District's Petition filed in this action and generally described above should not be granted. Be on further notice that, at such time, place, and date the Court will proceed to full and final hearing on the merits of all matters and prayers within the District's Petition.
SO ORDERED, signed this 23rd day of September, 2026.
/s/ Jessica Mangrum

Notice to Bidders: You are buying whatever interest, if any, the Debtor has in the property. Purchase of the Debtor's interest in the property may not extinguish any liens or security interests held by other persons. There are no warranties, express or implied, regarding the property being sold, including but not limited to warranties of title, merchantability or fitness for a particular purpose.
Notice to Judgment Debtor: If there is any property, real or personal, you want to point out for levy in lieu of the above described property, you must contact this office immediately. Bidders shall present an unexpired written statement issued to the person in the manner prescribed by Section 34.015, Tax Code, showing that the Travis County Assessor-Collector has determined that there are no delinquent ad valorem taxes owed by the person. In addition, an individual may not bid on or purchase property in the name of any other individual.
